

Fate of Russ Armies in Warsaw Salient Hangs in the Balance

No Official Confirmation of the Abandonment of the Polish Capital, But It Is Certain Czar's Forces Are Retiring to the East.

ONE LINE OF RETREAT
HAS BEEN CAPTURED BY AUSTRO-GERMANS

But Other Lines Remain, and It Is Believed the Grand Duke Nicholas Has Still an Excellent Chance of Saving His Whole Army. With Capture of Warsaw Germans Are Expected to Mass on Western Front.

London, July 31.—The fate of the Russian army in the Polish salient still hangs in the balance. No official confirmation had been received up to a late hour tonight of the evacuation of Warsaw by the Russian troops, but that they are withdrawing eastward is certain.

What portion will succeed in getting back to the new line is a matter of speculation. The arrival of Austrian cavalry at Lublin, which is officially announced from Vienna, shows that the southern line of retreat is entirely barred to the retreating army, as Field Marshal von Mackensen had previously crossed this railway.

CHANCE TO SAVE RUSSIAN ARMY.

There remain, however, the main direct route through Minsk, and an equally good road from Ivangorod through Lukov and the northern line, which runs south of the Bug river, to which some of the innumerable vehicular roads which enter the Polish capital from the east. Field Marshal von Hindenburg is prevented from crossing the Bug from the northeast, it is believed. Grand Duke Nicholas has still an excellent chance of saving his whole army.

When the Russians do reach the new line of defense they will be faced by another danger—that arising from the presence of General von Bulow's army, composed largely of cavalry, which is approaching the fortress of Kovno, and which is within three days' march of the Vitebsk-Petrograd railway.

Retreat, although described by Petrograd as voluntary, is accompanied by very hard fighting.

General von Kuropatkin's retreat from Liao-Yang, when he inflicted on the pursuing Japanese losses greater than his own. While the main army, with the field artillery, is making its way to the rear, the cavalry is making repeated attacks. In this way a few gains are gained, which are of inestimable value to the retreating forces.

GERMANS FREE FOR THE WEST.

It probably will be several days before the strategic issue is decided. The capture of a victory which will not only put the Russians on the defensive for many months, but which will greatly weaken the civilian population of central Europe and release an army of 200,000 or more men for an offensive in the west.

There continues to be sharp fighting at various points in the western zone, but the initiative is by one side or the other simply to secure the best starting point for the big offensive, which seems certain to come.

RUSSIANS RETIRE TO NEW LINE.

St. Petersburg, July 31.—(Via London, August 1, 1:47 a. m.)—The following official statement was issued by the Russian government tonight: "The Russian forces on Thursday night between the Vistula and the Bug night between the Vistula and the Bug evacuated the town of Lublin and the railway between the two stations of the line between the Vistula and the Bug. The Russian forces delivered a barren attack on Busk on the night of July 29 to 30 and yesterday morning the German forces drove back the enemy's advance guard.

"West of Kosiv on Thursday evening the enemy from several positions which he had captured in the morning, attacked the Russian forces. The Russian forces, with weak forces, continued his efforts to cross to the left bank of the river near the mouth of the Skwa and east of Rozan, delivered local attacks in the region of the villages of Zabino and Rembise. We maintained the old front.

"To the left of the Vistula yesterday we repulsed an enemy attack northwest of Bionart. Enemy troops which had crossed the Vistula on the front Magnusow-Kosiv were vigorously attacked by us in the course of the day. In the sector before the mouth of the Radecha we destroyed the enemy's forest on the right bank and drove his back to the left bank of the Vistula. On the upper Vistula the enemy is

GARRANZA HEEDS AMERICAN WARNING

And Sends Forces to Mexico City to Restore Order. Americans Said to Be in Danger in Capital.

Washington, July 31.—White reports of the reoccupation of Mexico City by General Gonzales lacked official confirmation tonight. It was known that General Carranza had ordered his forces back into the capital. General Carranza also directed that strong patrols be established along the railroad between Apizaco and Mexico City to protect it from bandit raids.

The order followed closely the vigorous representations sent by Secretary Lansing urging that the railway be opened and kept open so the starving population of Mexico City could be fed.

Notification of the order from General Carranza to General Gonzales reached the state department today and immediately afterward news was received unofficially that the advance guard of Gonzales' forces already had entered Mexico City. General Carranza plans to enter the city tomorrow with a large force to re-establish civil government, and to take steps to relieve distress among the people.

Heeded American Warning. Carranza's prompt response to insistence by the United States was regarded here as averting necessity for immediate action by this government to insure transportation of provisions to the Mexican capital. General Carranza was told in the message sent Thursday night that if he could not handle the situation it would be necessary for the United States to act. Although the government's plan was not announced it is known officials of the army and navy were ready to carry through a forcible program.

An outline of General Carranza's plan for re-establishment of government was conveyed to the state department today. General Carranza's plan followed: General Gonzales will set up civil government in Mexico City and distribute food to suffering people and establish a monetary system so that stores and banks can be reopened. The railroad to Vera Cruz will be opened and heavy trains will be started for the capital under heavy guard.

In co-operation with General Obregon, Gonzales' troops will reopen the north and northeast and transportation will be re-established into the state of Coahuila. Carranza's government has stored 250,000 bushels of corn.

Carson's Warning Recognized. An outline of the plan upon which General Carranza will base his claim for recognition also was presented.

Half-Hose Barred To Fair Bathers At Piedmont Park

Policeman Freeman Tells Pretty Mrs. Georgianna Davies That the Rules of the Park Forbid.

When this season at Piedmont lake, under a new regime, put the "O. K." on sleeveless bathing suits, Policeman Freeman, guardian of the peace and morals of Piedmont park, being a middle-aged man with a family, looked on with forced complacency, but yesterday afternoon when pretty Mrs. Georgianna Davies pointed her dainty heels skyward for her first dive and revealed to dare the above said rule, she had a pair of half-hose which was too much, much too much.

Officer Freeman allowed her to finish her swim, but when she emerged from the lake he stepped up beside her, cleared up his throat and whispered that in the future "there was nothing to do."

Mrs. Davies explained that while bathing at East Lake last week she tore a large hole in her bathing hose at the left knee, and, having intended to darn the same, which she had simplified matters by cutting her hose off.

The argument listened well, but still the several pink inches betwixt hose and bloomers—well, Officer Freeman saw it, but he just couldn't see it, he said.

Becker's Coffin Plate Says He Was Murdered By Governor Whitman

New York, July 31.—A silver plate bearing the inscription "Charles Becker, murdered July 20, 1915, by Governor Whitman," was placed tonight on the coffin containing Becker's body by direction of his widow. The plate is four by seven inches in size and the inscription is in an inch high. It is securely fastened.

Mrs. Becker is quoted as saying that she determined upon this plan after she appealed to Governor Whitman for a reprieve which the governor denied.

Albany, N. Y., July 31.—"I cannot believe it," was Governor Whitman's sole remark tonight when told of the plate on Charles Becker's coffin.

Slayer of Wives to Hang. London, July 31.—The hanging of George Joseph Smith was today set for August 15 at Maidstone prison. Smith was convicted July 1 on the charge of murdering three of his wives in his bath to collect insurance money on their lives.

Orduna Reaches Liverpool. New York, July 31.—The Cunard liner Orduna, which sailed from New York July 22, arrived at Liverpool today according to cable advice. She carried in addition to passengers 25. The crew is packing with large consignments of war munitions.

Tariffs Are Suspended. Washington, July 31.—Tariffs naming increased rates on fertilizers and packing house products from Chicago to points in North and South Carolina were suspended today by the interstate commerce commission until November 25. The increase in packing house products is about 3 cents and on fertilizer about 1 1/2 cents.

"GOD IS WITH US," PROCLAIMS KAISER TO GERMAN PEOPLE

Emperor Alleges He Was Forced Into War—"Before God My Conscience Is Clear," He Asserts.

London, August 1.—(4:40 a. m.)—Emperor William has issued a manifesto to the German people, on the occasion of the anniversary of the outbreak of the war, according to the dispatch received in Amsterdam from Berlin and forwarded by the correspondent of Reuters' Telegram company. In the manifesto, which was issued from the main headquarters of the German army, the emperor says:

"One year has elapsed since I was obliged to call to arms the German people. On the anniversary of the outbreak of the war, I feel it my duty to speak to the German people, to whom I am indebted for their loyalty and devotion."

"Before God and history my conscience is clear. I did not will the war. After preparations for a whole decade, the coalition powers, to whom Germany had become too great, believed that the moment had come to humiliate the empire which loyally stood by her Austro-Hungarian ally in the world."

"When in the days of August all able-bodied men were rushed to the colors and troops were marshaled into defensive war, every German on earth felt in accordance with the unanimous will of the Reichstag, that it was a matter of life or death for the German people and of Europe."

"The consciousness that the fight was forced upon us accompanied by a miracle of interrelations law by his own will, will be to shake the foundation of our conduct of the war."

"Full of gratitude, we can say today that God was with us. The enemy armies who boasted that they would enter Berlin in a few months are now heavy blows driven back far east and west. Numerous battles have been fought and the German army has shown its spirit of German manhood governed by the people."

"The question of the future of the German people is not a matter of life or death, but a matter of honor. The German people will stand by their government and their emperor."

"The German people will stand by their government and their emperor."

"The German people will stand by their government and their emperor."

Attorney James L. Key And Archie Lee Figure In Exciting Fist Fight

Resenting Criticism of Newspaper by Lawyer, Reporter Retaliates With Blow to Jaw, and Wild Excitement Reigns in Courtroom—"A Disgraceful Affair," Says Captain English, Who Announces That Future Meetings of the Commission Will Be Held in Commissioners' Room.

PROMINENT CITIZENS OF ATLANTA, OFFICERS AND MANY POLICEMEN CALL CHIEF BEAVERS COMPETENT

"Discipline Is Maintained and Harmony Rules in Department," They Tell Commission—"If Chief Beavers Is Discharged It Will Be Great Reflection Upon High Moral Standing of This Community," Says R. J. Guinn—Every Man on Police Force Summated—Resume Hearing Monday.

Wild excitement reigned in the crowded courtroom last night at the trial of Chief of Police James L. Beavers when, at the moment of adjournment, a lively fist battle was staged between Attorney James L. Key, one of the counsel for the chief, and Archie Lee, a reporter for The Georgian and American.

For a moment it appeared as though many others of the wild and surging crowd that pressed around the combatants would join in the melee and make it general. Wild disorder prevailed, however, for a short time, during which Chief Beavers was rushed out of the door by his friends.

Mr. Key had vehemently pronounced a headline in a night edition of The Sunday American to be "a vulgar lie." The instant the proceedings were adjourned, Lee, who sat with other reporters at the same table occupied by Mr. Key, strode to the lawyer's side.

The substance for the story which formed a basis for the headline, "Chief Laid Off Admits Discard in Police Department," had been telephoned to his office by Lee.

"Do you mean to call that headline and story a lie?" he asked the attorney.

"I certainly do," was the reply.

The two men faced each other, while the audience, moving toward the door, pressed around them.

UPPERCUT TO JAW. Lee drew back and delivered an uppercut to the lawyer's jaw. Mr. Key reeled backward, the blow and stumbling back into the arms of Michael Woods, an attorney. After a dozen men grabbed hold of the two men, Lee was pinned and forced back upon a table.

Vigorous whoops and jeers came from the crowd, which clambered upon tables, benches and chairs. The twelve police commissioners, standing upon the rostrum, had, nervously speaking, "grandstand" seats for the fracas.

Friends of both the newspaper man and lawyer pushed in. Lee was being held by a number of policemen and

Majority of Council Said to Be Pledged for Resolution for Charter Amendment.

That general council, by a healthy majority, will adopt a resolution Monday providing for a charter amendment to abolish the present police board, was the general belief Saturday around the city hall, where it was stated that a majority of the members have already agreed to sign a measure and be known as introducers.

The question was first discussed formally by the council and sent to a committee of general council last week and, on the announcement that the city attorney had been directed to draw up the measure for consideration Monday, many members heartily approved the plan.

An effort will be made to have it rushed through council and sent to the general assembly for passage this session. There remain less than two weeks in which to get the measure through the assembly, but it is believed that with the proper backing from the city hall, where it is believed that the majority of the members have already agreed to sign a measure and be known as introducers.

MEN MOVING TRACK PUT UNDER ARREST; MOTOR CAR WRECKED

Douglas, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—News has just reached here that the purchasers of the Fitzgerald, Broton and Ocala railroad sent a large force of men with cars to Broton to begin work removing the rails. The cars were being loaded, and information of the move spreading rapidly, citizens of Broton instituted legal proceedings, arrested the bosses and working force, unloaded the cars and sent away the train. The men were released and allowed to go home.

The motor car of the section boss, leaving the work, was wrecked and he and two hands were painfully injured.

OF COURSE PETROGRAD ISN'T PARIS!

Still Mrs. Marye Found the Life of an Ambassador's Wife in Russia Delightful, but Her Return Home Did Start the Gossips.

AND, at that, it isn't so much what the gossips are saying as it is what Mrs. George T. Marye, wife of the United States ambassador to Russia, isn't saying. You can't make gossips stop talking any more than you can make a silent woman start talking when she doesn't want to. That is the situation exactly. Mrs. Marye suddenly left the Muscovite empire and came home. Here she is in America and there her husband is in Russia.

Therefore the gossips' prattle. They say Mrs. Marye is disgusted with the czar and his court. They say Mrs. Marye wanted to be the wife of the ambassador to France and was hurt when she had to be merely the wife of the ambassador to Russia. They say Mrs. Marye will never go back to Russia. They say Mrs. Marye's husband is going to resign his post. They say Mrs. Marye and her husband have not been invited to any of the Russian court functions. They say Mrs. Marye is going back soon to take a Russian castle.

There are a thousand of these gossips "they say." But, of course, for every "they say Mrs. Marye is," there is a companion "they say Mrs. Marye isn't." Through it all Mrs. Marye has kept a dignified and mysterious silence. She has denied several of the "they say" but in such a manner that it has given the gossips more courage than ever.

twenty miles between the Russian railway going toward Sweden and the Swedish railway going toward Russia. Then it was necessary for the ambassador's wife to search about for some sort of a cart for herself and four trunks. She finally secured a two-wheeled one which had a furry pony and lap coverings of straw and very, very smelly skins. Moreover, she had for a companion a perfectly strange man whom she has not seen before or since. Her four modest trunks came tumbling after in another more or less staple cart. In this regal style she made the twenty-mile journey across the bleak and bitter Scandinavian country. An undignified trip, truly, for the wife of an American ambassador.

When she and the ambassador went to Russia the ordinary way was open to them through Germany and Mrs. Marye said to her maid: "Now we have twenty-four trunks and I am going to be very disagreeable if one of them fails to show up." As a matter of fact they all arrived and Mrs. Marye showed up in the capital of the Russian as well dressed a woman as America could wish to represent her at a foreign court.

But when returning Mrs. Marye issued no hard and fast proclamation about her trunks or as to how many were to come. If they were lost, submerged or abandoned, well and good, they would have to be charged to profit and loss.

As if there were not enough destruction

George T. Marye

Mrs. George T. Marye

But when all is said and done it looks as if the real reason for the return of the Russian ambassador's wife is the matching of the democratic pride of a beautiful and accomplished woman against the autocratic indifference of the czar of all the Russias.

Ambassador Marye has been at his Petrograd post for barely a year. His wife remained at his side only a few months. When she returned there was no one even among her friends who could make her say whether she had been received at the Romanoff court or not. Several government officials, however, said in a quiet tone of voice they were under the impression that she had not been.

About all that could actually be learned from her was that she had an exciting time in getting out of the country which she did not like a little bit. In ordinary peace times the traveler leaves or enters Russia either by way of Germany or Austria. But the war, of course, makes travel by the direct route impossible.

Therefore, madame, the wife of the ambassador, had to leave Russia by way of the Scandinavian peninsula. Sweden, of course, abuts on Russia, and it would seem to be a fairly simple proposition to take a train from Petrograd and go north and west through Russia and then down south and west through Sweden. But it can't be done—at least, not so easily.

Ever since Russia built her railroad to the Swedish border Sweden has absolutely refused to connect up her own railway with it. She has always been afraid of Russia as an aggressive and swallowing power, therefore, her railroad separation from her. As a result there is a gap of going on by human institution and as if the wife of the American representative had not had her share of hardships did she not meet with an awful mishap on the water! Having carefully selected a boat of the neutral Scandinavian line it just naturally and quietly without the assistance of either the Germans or the English caught fire.

For the greater part of two days the wife of the ambassador and all the other passengers slept and ate and walked about with their life preservers on.

It was easy enough to guess from the foregoing recital of hardships that Mrs. Marye wanted to get out of Russia real badly for some reason or other. One of the answers that Mrs. Marye gave was that she left at home a charming little daughter, as quaint as a conventionalized little girl of a colored illustration.

She came over to spend the summer with this little daughter, she said, and in the fall, she continued, "if one may make plans ahead that have their setting in the warring nations, I will take the child back with me. I am going to spend the summer with her in California and will probably return by way of Japan."

At the same time she told of her intention—if she returns to Russia—of taking a palace there of forty rooms. It would take thirty servants to run it, that is thirty American servants, which, as servants go in Russia, would mean at least sixty of the Muscovites. It has two bathrooms, scores of gems of art, one bathroom unheated and furnished with an elaborate carved tub in which the water does not run.

The Petrograd post anyway has been a Jonah to the President. His first choice as ambassador to the czar was Henry M. Pindell, a Peoria editor. But a letter which Senator James Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, wrote Pindell offering him the place on behalf of the President robbed the editor of his opportunity to serve at Petrograd.

The President's eye next fell upon Congressman Sharp, of Ohio, now ambassador to France. Sharp, however, had made speeches in Congress urging the abrogation of the treaty of 1832 and in these speeches he had severely arraigned the Russian government.

When the Russian government was approached as to his acceptability as ambassador, Russia quickly returned a firm answer to the effect that Sharp decidedly would not be a welcome official visitor to Russia.

At the time Marye was under consideration for the post of Paris, President Wilson then decided to give him the place at Petrograd and Sharp the one at Paris. At the time it was known by Mrs. Marye's friends that she did not like the switch from the exquisite things of Paris to the almost barbaric things of Petrograd.

MURPHY SHOWS WHY TIRES ARE POPULAR

Company Makes Twenty Different Kinds Exclusive of Safety Tread.

"One of the biggest assets of the B. F. Goodrich company, is price," says R. J. Murphy, local branch manager of the big Akron, Ohio, manufacturer of Goodrich Safety Tread tires. "Pride in perfecting the tire, and the achievement won, step by step, through frank and fair means only. Pride in the maintenance of a high standard of quality—in a reputation for reliability—dependability—and the square deal at all times."

The B. F. Goodrich company has been making history in the rubber industry for more than forty-five years. It has always been the leader. It has almost never had a "boom," or the reaction that follows a boom.

It has been conservative in all its policy—never experimenting at its customers' expense, yet never lagging behind first place in the procession. It has been the pioneer in nearly all great improvements made in the working of rubber.

And it has grown, steadily, surely, as well as stupendously, until the largest rubber factory in the world today is that of the B. F. Goodrich company at Akron, Ohio.

The operations of this factory require and still use more than seventy-five acres of floor space, and the B. F. Goodrich company frequently employs more than 15,000 people.

No other rubber factory in the world has so much crude rubber, manufacturing as much as 1,000,000 pounds of rubber goods yearly.

It pays one-tenth of all the taxes in the city of Akron, which city has five times as many people as the city of Akron.

Some of the White Anchor tire hose, made way back in 1864 (30 years ago), is still doing good service, because of the precision principle and quality amounting to the best of all Goodrich company products.

Every day in the year, on average, the operations of the B. F. Goodrich company result in the receiving of more than 20,000 pieces of mail, and more than 100 telegrams.

It manufactures 24 classes of rubber goods—some of these classes subdividing into large businesses. Thus it makes 150 kinds of rubber hose, 11 kinds of rubber tubing, 3 kinds of insulated and other wire, etc.

All this in addition to its other departments, and the twenty-one kinds of rubber tires it makes exclusive of the Goodrich Safety Tread.

This volume of rubber buying, manufacturing and selling, with the corresponding reduction of overhead expense, what gives to the Goodrich factory the lowest cost for tire manufacturing of the highest grade.

The responsibility to so many lines of dealers and consumers, in so many lines of trade, is what makes it so anxious in guarding the quality and value of each product that bears the Goodrich name—so slow to launch new things until thoroughly tested—so keen to make success sure and continuous, rather than dramatic and transient.

And of all these Goodrich products, that which best expresses the measure of our capacity, our experience and good faith is the Goodrich Safety Tread tire.

It does this through giving the greatest mileage and real value in the field, at the fairest cost, per mile, to user.

"When you test these Goodrich Safety Tread tires, and compare with others of considerably higher price, you will then understand our price in Goodrich standards and ideals."

"A pride which results in Goodrich tires being made better each year than they have ever been, and improved with each month's output."

The Goodrich Safety Tread tire today gives more mileage than our own (or any other) plain-tread tire with only about 5 per cent more cost to us and about 5 per cent more price to you than that of our plain tread.

This in line with Goodrich company policy, which is to base its charges only on its low manufacturing cost, no matter how much more price could be obtained for the greater efficiency it develops from its materials.

"Fried water" tests in this, concerns your pocketbook.

Darcy Beats McGorty.
London, July 31.—(8:07 p. m.)—Eddie McGorty, of Oakland, Cal. (last defeated at Sydney, N. S. W., tonight in the sixteenth round of a middleweight championship battle) with Darcy, an Australian boxer, according to a dispatch to the Central News agency.

Darcy gained easy mastery over the American and won with a knockout.

MAXWELL AUTO DEALERS WHO MET IN ATLANTA TUESDAY TO EXAMINE 1916 MODEL

Last Tuesday was Maxwell day in Atlanta when some 100 dealers from Georgia and South Carolina gathered together at the big warehouse of the Maxwell Company on Madison avenue to examine and contract for the new 1916 model and partake of the Maxwell hospitality.

H. H. Howe, zone supervisor of sales, and his assistant, James P. Headley, and District Salesman C. P. Hennessy welcomed the dealers to the meeting, and disclosed the 1916 sales plans and co-operative policies of Maxwell.

The car was unveiled and explained in detail by R. H. Rowland, an expert from the factory, after which contracts for the 1916 season were closed. Luncheon was served in the warehouse and never before has such a unique feast been enjoyed at an automobile meeting in Atlanta. Everybody was in a holiday mood and jumped into the spirit of the warehouse luncheon with the keenest relish.

Overland Company Preparing For Big Business in Georgia

With fifty-two dealers in the state of Georgia, the Southern Overland Automobile company of Atlanta is preparing to claim first place in the state market as producers of the one best car in a medium-priced automobile.

Heralding the Willys-Knight car, which has only recently been placed in the ranks of medium-priced automobiles with the first Knight engine, outside of an expensive machine, and shipping as fast as possible the popular priced Overland, the Atlanta southern branch of the Overland Automobile company, of Toledo, is bound for the conquest of the state.

Officers of the Overland Southern Automobile company state that they are going to win the Georgia market mainly through the quality of their machines, and secondarily because they have the staunch support of their fifty-two dealers who are just as enthusiastic over the automobile they handle as its makers.

These fifty-two dealers names appear on a double-page of The Sunday Constitution, showing that there is an "Overland man" in almost every town of any consequence in Georgia, who is out to convince the Georgians that they can get the best car for the lowest price in their own home town.

BUSHELS OF LETTERS TESTIFY TO MERITS OF GOODYEAR TIRES

"We do not often use publicly the bushels of testimonial letters we receive, telling of the performance of Goodyear tires," says James E. Taylor, branch manager, the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company. "They are, of course, a source of satisfaction to us, because they are proof that Goodyear tires make good. Occasionally, however, one letter stands out as typical of the many, and we can't help telling about it. For instance, this one describing the performance of a Goodyear cord tire is from the S. C. Lowe Supply company, Boston."

"The tire has been on the front of our Franklin demonstrating car since last August, and we used it up to 10,000 miles, without the least trouble, excepting one small puncture, and as you can see, it is still serviceable."

"On demonstrating and rent cars we have used at different times almost every make of tire, and we have never yet found a tire to act as satisfactorily as your cord tire, and it is with great pleasure that we sent this letter to you, feeling that we are more than its money's worth out of it. Other Goodyear cord tires, which have been given us on minute's notice since they were put on the car last October."

MORE THAN $15,000,000 WILL SOON BE SENT TO FORD PURCHASERS

The Ford company make an important announcement in a flat reduction in the price of their car, coupled with the statement that while they guarantee against any further reduction within a year, they cannot give assurance that the price may not be advanced at any time.

Last year a flat reduction of $60 in price was given and a further inducement made that contingent upon the company selling 300,000 new Ford cars at retail during the twelve months, they would profit share with the purchasers of such cars to the extent of from $40 to $60 on each car.

The company has sold over 300,000 new cars within the time specified, and beginning August 15 profit sharing checks of $50 each will be mailed to the 300,000 and more buyers of Ford cars during the year ending July 31, 1915.

This profit sharing with retail purchasers was not intended by the company to be understood as having anything to do with price reduction, but as a reward for the evidence of good will and appreciation of the assistance such owners would give the company in helping it sell the 300,000 cars.

The $50 profit sharing check will be mailed in August to 300,000 and more

Starting and Lighting System for the Ford Will Cost Only $65

A wonderfully complete, ready-for-installation Splitdorf-Apelco electric starting and lighting system for Ford cars for $65, including freight, is the latest sensational offering of the Splitdorf Electrical company, of New York.

"The most compact—the most serviceable system for the Ford owner has been the designing and manufacturing dictum, while absolute utility has been the keynote for the strenuous and exhaustive tests before bringing it to Atlanta," says W. J. St. Onge, Atlanta branch manager for the Splitdorf company.

"In unique features of construction and application—in simplicity of installation and effectiveness of operation—continue Mr. St. Onge, 'the Splitdorf-Apelco outfit holds the palm for lighting-starting, qualities, and there is naturally a big demand for installations among the thousands of Ford owners.'"

The Splitdorf-Apelco system consists of a motor-generator, indicating automatic switch and starting switch, together with a 12-volt storage battery and all necessary parts for installation.

By connecting the motor-generator across the terminals of the battery through the starting switch, the electrical machine acts as a motor, spinning the engine until it picks up on its own power. The motor-generator is then driven by the engine as a dynamo, furnishing current for charging the battery.

Acting as a motor, the machine has sufficient power to spin the engine at a good rate of speed.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The following prices f.o.b. Detroit, effective August 2, 1915:

|                        |          |
|------------------------|----------|
| Ford Runabout . . .    | $390.00 |
| Ford Touring Car . . . | 440.00   |
| Ford Town Car . . .    | 640.00   |

No speedometer included in this year's equipment, otherwise cars fully equipped.

There can be no assurance given against an advance in these prices at any time. We guarantee, however, that there will be no reduction in these prices prior to August 1, 1916.

Profit-Sharing with Retail Buyers

On August 1, 1914, we made the announcement that if we could make and sell at retail 300,000 Ford cars between August 1, 1914, and August 1, 1915, we would share profits with the retail purchasers, to the extent of from $40 to $60 on each car. We have sold over 300,000 Ford cars in the time specified, and profit-sharing checks of $50 each will be distributed as rapidly as possible after August 15, 1915. Retail purchasers who have not yet mailed us their profit-sharing coupons, properly indorsed, should do so without delay.

Our plan to profit-share with retail purchasers of Ford cars during 1914-15 has been most successful. We thoroughly believe in it, but, realizing the uncertainty of conditions generally makes it advisable to defer any announcement of future profit-sharing until a later date.

We are, however, confident of our inability to reduce costs for several months, and therefore can offer no profit-sharing for cars delivered during August, September and October, 1915.

How to Bring High Ceilined Room Down to More Modern Dimensions Through Appropriate Decorations

By MADAME MAISON.

OCCASIONALLY one has the problem of ceilings which are over nine feet and then the wall decorations must be carefully handled so as to cut the height as much as possible. There are paneled effects in wall paper that are excellent, and if expense does not have to be considered the walls may be painted (many coats, seven not too many) and the walls divided with ivory moldings into the desired panels.

For such a living or drawing room the mantel should be of ivory enamel to match the wood work and over it hang a gilt framed mirror either in colonial or French design, depending on the furnishings of the room which one is selected. The andirons may be either dull or bright brass, and an old fashioned fender goes well with such a fireplace. Place a sofa to one side and a comfortable easy chair opposite, both to be upholstered in brocade, tawsestry, or an English linen.

If a pair of French or colonial candles are obtainable place one on either side the mantelpiece and have no other ornaments on it.

For pictures, if one has to purchase new ones, choose some old French or English prints and have them framed very simply in dull gold; the hand-carved frames are lovely.

A leaf table, one leaf turned up against the wall, will be good besides the fireplace; and to give warmth and color to this room have a rose velvet rug cover the entire floor, excepting a border of the dark waxed floor, say five feet around the edge of the room.

Have the lighting from the side, with rose-colored shield-shaped shades, and two or three of the ivory alabaster (in appearance) concealed lights hanging from the ceiling by dull gold chains.

For odd pieces of furniture have a couple of chairs in the dull ivory wicker.

Reply to A. D.

Why not have a living-room instead of a parlor? I think you would be much better satisfied, as such a room is very practical and much more up to date than the old-fashioned parlor, which was usually too formal a place for anyone to have a really good time. You will need a good, comfortable couch, a large table, a couple of easy chairs, a small table for serving tea, and I would advise a desk and a couple of wicker chairs, one rocker and one armchair with a receptacle at the side for holding work or magazines. If I knew what you had now for the "daughter's room" I could better advise you what to get. I am glad you enjoyed that illustration, and I will try to put in a pretty bedroom very soon.

Where to Hang Paintings.
I have two very fine oil paintings of my grandparents; would they be suitable in the dining-room, as there is no good wall space for them in the hall?

A READER.
Family portraits may be placed in the dining-room with good effect, and as you say that is your only good wall space, by all means hang them there and rest assured that you are doing the proper thing.

Correct Color Scheme.

We are going to paint the walls of living-room, dining-room and reception hall. My problem is the color scheme. The woodwork is golden oak throughout. The dining-room furniture is mahogany, the living-room walnut, the reception hall golden oak. As they are connected by archways, of course the colors must blend. But I want my hall, with its northern exposure, to be made cheery and inviting, while the dining-room, with the southern exposure, needs a soft, cool were a failure, and they are now happy where they once were discontented.

This is only a part of the analysis you should learn where your work is concerned. Though you have a taste and better still a liking for your occupation, you should tender and nourish it, the way a gardener does his flowers or an artist does his pictures.

Use the better method of studying your work from different angles and you will gradually learn its strength and weakness better than anybody can do for you. Before you know what has taken place you will be more critical with your own work than your employer would be had the responsibility been left to him.

You should take stock of your whole physical and mental make-up in the same critical and analytical fashion. This is not a waste of time and effort, but it is time and energy well expended.

tone and the living-room, between, a happy medium. If possible I should like to have the same color throughout.

KATE B.
Use a warm color yellow (not too bright) in the hall, and it will make you think of sunshine all day long; then do the dining and living rooms in a yellowish tan. From the diagram you sent, these rooms are too much on to employ the color schemes, and you will be much better pleased to have them the same. Have a screen of three or four panels, done in tan burial, and put up when necessary to conceal what is going on in the dining-room when guests are in the living room. I would not use portieres in this opening, as under ordinary conditions there are no objections to a well-kept dining-room being in evidence.

Strawberry Sherbet—Cleanse thoroughly one quart of strawberries and put through a sieve. Add the juice of one lemon and one cupful water. Sweeten to taste. Freeze same as ice cream, and when about half frozen add two stiffly beaten egg whites.

Mackerel Roe with Egg Sauce—Saute two mackerel roes. Melt two tablespoons butter, add two tablespoons flour and pour one cupful milk on gradually. Season with one-fourth teaspoonful salt, a few grains of cayenne, one teaspoonful lemon juice and the same amount of lemon juice. Moisten with well-flavored beef or veal stock and press in buttered bread. Bake occasionally during baking. Bake one hour or a little more.

Hot Veal Loaf—Chop two pounds of lean veal and one-fourth pound salt pork. Mix in one cupful cracker crumbs and one sweet green pepper, chopped fine. Add three beaten eggs, one teaspoonful salt, a few grains of cayenne, one teaspoonful onion juice and the same amount of lemon juice. Moisten with well-flavored beef or veal stock and press in buttered bread. Bake occasionally during baking. Bake one hour or a little more.

The Vacation Three Girls Worked Out And Gave to Their Mother

By DOROTHY DOLAN.

LICE, Mary and Kate were three happy and unselfish young girls. They were as fond of their mother as any girls could be. The trouble was that the mother was doing so much for the girls that they were beginning to take her thoughtfulness as a matter of course.

Even after they were grown they expected her to plan their holiday. They considered this a part of her housekeeping responsibility. They felt that their obligations consisted in doing their daily outside work well and contributing their share to the family income.

When not absorbed in their work they were interested in their friends, so they failed to notice that their mother was growing thinner and her steps were more hesitating. One day the girls got together to talk over and plan their summer outing for August when mother interrupted them with these words: "It makes no difference to me, my dears, I am glad to go wherever you wish."

The girls answered that they had been planning and planning for weeks. Because this was to be mother's holiday they had rented a two-room shack on a bluff overlooking a lake. Twelve dollars a week for rent did seem a good deal of money, but the rooms were of good size and the cozy camp had a wonderful sleeping porch. The front part of the large veranda was used as a dining-room.

Here mother had her large rocking chair to read, sew and to rock in turns. At the other end of the porch was a large swing where mother or one of the girls could rest or read on the warm afternoons. In the middle of the porch was a rustic table for the plants and books. This same table was used for serving the three meals every day in sunny weather. It was only when the weather was stormy that the family ate inside.

The girls went fishing every other day so they had all the fish they needed for breakfast and for one other meal, either luncheon or dinner. They brought with them plenty of canned goods, such as sardines, salmon, peas, corn, macaroni and fruits. A farmer close at hand sold them eggs and plenty of fresh milk, so the housekeeping progressed simply and economically.

When they got tired of eating canned vegetables and fruits they used them for soups, salads and desserts. Once in a while they indulged in a large basket of fruit, which they ate raw and made into fine fruit dishes. They made a point of finishing the luncheon to three courses, so they would have most of the afternoon as they liked.

When mother did not nap she had a pleasant outing with the girls, which meant they had a lovely row in the rowboat or in a canoe or went calling on some of the neighbors who had shacks or tents on the lake. If mother felt tired she stayed at home and napped.

At 5 sharp they were sure to be home to make and serve tea on the veranda. Often the tea was enjoyed by the members of the family, but occasionally some of their friends came in for the simple spread. As a rule they had a hot supper served on the porch. Here again simplicity prevailed; there were never more than three or four courses. Occasionally the family camped out for tea. One of the girls delegated herself to the building of a log fire and heated the water for the making of soup and the cooking of vegetables. A second broiled the meat or the fish and heated the vegetables. The third spent her energy setting the table and cleaning up after the spread.

Series of Pleasant Surprises Used To Announce a Girl's Engagement Among Her Circle of Intimate Friends

By DAME CURTSEY.

A young woman who had been away from her home town on a prolonged trip returned and announced her engagement in this way: She managed to keep her secret, and so when eight of her girl friends were hidden to the entrance they did not suspect the denouncement that was to be made. When they went to the dining-room the decorations and cards set them to thinking, for the centerpiece was a glass plateau on which was placed a boat under sail. There were six case favors at each place, with a card which read: "The man in the case," also was satin bags out of which a cat's face came, with a wee card around its neck saying "The cat's out of the bag." The hostess explained that the centerpiece represented the

"Boa of Matrimony," and told the guests they were to guess who was about to embark upon it. The suit cases were opened and revealed the photograph of the "man in the case," but no one knew him. By diligent questioning the hostess was found out and congratulations followed.

The "leather" wedding brings the fourth anniversary and a dinner party is an enjoyable way to celebrate. Six or eight well chosen guests are a good number, and the table may be made most attractive. Use one of those pretty green or brown skins in place of a cloth, with plate doilies to match. The centerpiece can be a low earthenware jar filled with flowers. For the place cards use squares of leather with the letters done in gold. Another very appropriate centerpiece would be three kid slippers, heels together, with the toes pointed out, filled with flowers.

If expense does not have to be considered, card cases for all, with the name stamped on the inside, would make exquisite place cards. From the chandelier over the table suspend four wedding bells. After the repeat each guest must take a turn with the "good luck" slipper; it must be an old one, or the charm will not work. Twirl it three times around the head from left to right, make a wish, and then throw it on the floor behind the back. If it falls with the toe pointed toward you, the wish will come true; if the heel, there is no hope of fulfillment; if it lands sideways—

To Escape Hornets, Jumps In River and Is Drowned

Athens, Ga., July 31.—(Special).—James Johnson, colored, met death in an unusual manner yesterday morning on the Oconee several miles from the city. He had been sent after a boat by a party of hunters from this place while spending some time on the river banks. He got the boat and with two other men was rowing down stream. In the progress of the party he caught hold of an overhanging oak limb and shook loose a big nest of hornets attached to the limb. The hornets poured forth and the men fled in confusion. Johnson leaped into the water to escape the stinging insects and was rescued by the hunters swimming away from him and the hornets.

Brunswick, Ga., July 31.—(Special).—Willard Oliveros, the young white man who killed his stepfather, Fred Prosser, in this city a few months ago, was yesterday acquitted by a jury in the Glynn superior court, a verdict being returned by the jury in less than five minutes after the case was given to them.

The jury went over the entire case leading up to the tragedy, and his statement was corroborated by most of the testimony introduced by the defense. Prosser had cursed and pointed a pistol at his wife while drinking on Saturday night. On Monday Oliveros told Prosser what he was doing by cursing and pointing a revolver at his mother and sister, whereupon the man, uttering an oath and threatening to wipe out the entire family, picked up a hammer lying near by. Oliveros then grabbed a large piece of lead pipe and struck his wife, leaving the woman bleeding and returning to his home. Prosser was removed to the hospital, where he lived for only a few hours.

"Johnny, how did you hurt your hand? I hope you haven't been fighting again."

On January 1, 1916, people were five times as numerous in the United States as horses; and horses were five times as numerous as mules. Texas had over twice as many mules (753,900) as Missouri, its closest competitor. Texas also led in cattle (5,121,000) having nearly twice as many as Iowa had twice as many as many as Iowa (1,720,000) as Illinois, its closest competitor. Montana and Wyoming are the two greatest sheep states, each having about 4,400,000 head. New Mexico and Ohio come next with about 3,300,000 apiece.

In the Social Whirl

By Irma Dooley.

Mrs. Walter Lamar, of Macon, was a charming visitor to the city and one of the out-of-town guests at the reception given Wednesday evening by Governor and Mrs. Harris, when many of their friends from Macon were present. Mrs. Lamar visited the state-house Thursday, and had as her distinguished escort Governor Harris and Hon. William H. Burwell.

"Yes, I am running for an office," said Mrs. Lamar when asked jokingly if she had "an ax to grind." "But it is not an office the general assembly can give me."

"The office you speak of is that of the presidency of United Daughters of the Confederacy, and I have been urged by my friends to be a candidate. I feel that there is no organization in the south which more surely represents the most precious traditions of the south and the preservation of southern history as the most sacred obligation of our organization."

"I was urged by the Daughters of the Confederacy two years ago to announce my candidacy, but I would not consent then, as Georgia had her representative on the board of officers in that splendid and gifted woman, Miss Mildred Rutherford, the historian general of the organization, and I felt Georgia must not be grasping."

"But when Miss Rutherford, nearing the expiration of her term of office, urged me to respond to the calls of the women who desired my candidacy for the presidency, I felt I owed it to Georgia and to my supporters to accept their wishes."

"Yes, I am a great believer in women's organizations and in their fellowship in our higher civilization. I belong to several organizations, but to none of them am I more entirely in sympathy than with the Daughters of the Confederacy."

"I believe that organization has the sacred obligation to perpetuate the noblest cause in southern history. When at the inaugural reception Wednesday evening I had the privilege of shaking the hand of my veteran friend, Governor Harris, when I saw with the flag of the nation the colors of the Confederate flag, it was almost overcome with the dramatic import of the occasion."

"It is probably the last time in my history that we can claim as an active participant in our affairs of state a man who rendered service to the Confederate cause."

"I am not lacking in allegiance to the nation of today. In the executive mansion of Georgia, I have met many distinguished men of the north as well as of the south, many of these introduced to me by my father. I learned during the time he served Georgia in congress to realize the meaning of national peace; but I learned at the same time that loyalty to national ideals did not mean the destruction of southern ideals and heritages, and that no symbol of faith or patriotism bore more meaning than this little badge 'I always wear' and Mrs. Lamar pointed to the badge of the Daughters of the Confederacy."

A TALENTED WOMAN.

Mrs. Lamar is president of the Georgia division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. She is a member of the Shiloh monument committee of the general U. D. C., and she has been influential in the establishment of several Confederate memorials in Georgia. She is a believer in memorializing the living and has been one of the most active friends of the schools established for the education of the mountain youth of Georgia. She is the supporter of the recently organized Ellen Wilson memorial for the education of mountain youth. She has been chairman for five years of the infirmity committee of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs. In the effort to secure an appropriation for building adequate infirmaries at the state institutions of Georgia, and she is largely instrumental in the appropriation made last week by the general assembly for the establishment of an infirmary at the State Normal school at Athens, Ga. Mrs. Lamar is a member of the legislative committee of the Federation. She is a woman of broad culture and literary attainment and her home is one of the most hospitable in the south. She is the wife of Walter Lamar, of Macon, Ga., representing one of the oldest and most prominent families in the south, and her father was the late James Blount, of Macon, soldier, statesman, and scholar.

THE PASTEL SHADES.

"Pastel shades, that is what we are making this year," a well-known silk manufacturer is quoted as saying in Vogue.

"Bright, crude colors are no more; the materials now in the looms are all in pastel colors—dull, faded, flat. And colors are dead; we are not making them—everything is pastel, pastel, pastel. Oh, of course," he added, "the new colors are exquisite. I will tell you something about the pastel shades. They are produced by the use of a very fine dye that gives the shade. Yes, we are using a wrap of blue with every color except blue."

"And with blue, we use rose water. So we are to have pastel shades. It is the pastel shades which make their appearance with the ballet russe and the pastel shades which make their appearance with the ballet russe and the pastel shades which make their appearance with the ballet russe."

"One of the novelties of the season is a silk shot with gold or silver, and widely striped with velvet. The stripes may be of uniform width—at an inch and a quarter wide—or the velvet stripes may be set on the silk at intervals of two inches, very frequently the silk background is secured in pastel."

AT THE MANSION.

Governor and Mrs. Harris have as their guest at the mansion this week, Miss Margaret Luttrell, of Washington, D. C. She was a member of the receiving party Wednesday evening, and wore a smart toilet in white satin with deep draperies of black tulle and girgile and trimmings of rose color. Mrs. Walter Lamar, of Macon, wore a white crepe gown embroidered in a design of pearls. Mrs. Seiden, of Macon, wore a white gown with white chiffon and lace and trimmings of blue. Mrs. William Lawson Peel wore a white lace gown with white trimmings of pearls. Mrs. Joseph M. Brown was beautifully gowned in orchid-colored satin. Mrs. Griffith, of Valdosta, wore a becoming toilet in white net and lace.

"An Evening in China," with which nesday evening, was a very unique and enjoyable occasion, though the guests did not partake as freely of the Chinese dishes as if they had been those of this section of the world, say fried chicken, cream gravy, a corn fritter and, maybe, a waffle or a hot roll. But the setting was charming, and the lights and the music.

Among the visiting ladies notably attractive was Mrs. Edward Morris, from Kentucky, wearing a flesh-colored chiffon gown and a hat of the same color, trimmed in flowers. Miss Ashcroft wore white silk and net. Mrs. W. H. Burwell wore a chic costume of black and white with flower-trimmed hat.

Mrs. Ralph Brown, the guest of Mrs. E. A. Alsup, wore a becoming toilet in white and blue. Mrs. William Robinson wore a white gown with white trimmings of pearls. Mrs. Burton Smith wore an embroidered chiffon gown trimmed in pale pink. Her hat of pale pink trimmed in flowers.

chiffon hat in black and white. Mrs. Beaumont Davies wore a white tulle and net gown with hat to match. Mrs. John Murphy wore a cream-colored lace gown over pink, her hat of tulle and lace. Mrs. John S. Cohen wore an all-white gown with hat of black tulle. Mrs. Henry Jackson wore white lace and chiffon gown.

Meeting of Buckeye Club.

The Buckeye Women's club met in Grant park Tuesday, July 27, in regular session. Important business was discussed. The Atlanta Child's home had been visited by a committee and a report made. The club intends to aid this worthy institution this year. After the routine work was finished, a memorial service was held for Mrs. J. C. Huntington, the oldest member of the club, whose death occurred Sunday, July 25. A picnic luncheon was served and heartily enjoyed. There will be no meeting in August. A full attendance is desired at the first meeting of the year in September.

The Argentine Club Dance.

During the month of August, the Argentine club will hold two dances, the first of which will be on next Friday evening at the club rooms, corner of Peach and West End. The plans are being made for the entertainment of the guests and these will be enjoyable occasions for those of the younger set who attend the Argentine club affairs.

Why WE Blush and Why Women BLUSH OFTENER Than Men

It Springs From the Sensitive Soul and Cannot Be Provoked by Any Physical Means Now Known to Scientists.

By Sir Arthur Mitchell, K. C. B.

BLUSHING generally only the face, ears and neck redden, but it is nevertheless correct to say that the whole body may be affected, and there may be tingling, or some peculiar sensation, almost everywhere. The redness may begin on the forehead, but it usually begins on the cheeks, from which it spreads to the neck and ears, in no regular or uniform manner. It rarely goes so low down as the collar bone or shoulder blades, but there are well attested cases on record in which it has gone down much lower—over the chest and abdomen, and even over the upper part of the legs.

In persons who belong to races that habitually go almost naked the blush is said to be more extended, and to go often down to the arms, chest and waist. But it is not a well established fact that this is a distinct characteristic of people whose bodies are nearly as much exposed as are the faces and necks of more fully clothed people. In other words, it is not certain that in such people blushing has habitually this greater extent.

Against the view that the parts of the body more or less constantly exposed are those most liable to become red from any state of mind, is the fact that the hands, which are almost constantly exposed, never redden from such a cause.

The blush cannot be excited by physical means. Burgess says "it must be solely a moral (mental) stimulus that will excite a true blush," and that "its presence is the result of a painful struggle in the mental feelings." There is truth in this, and a truth of importance. But the "painful struggle" is perhaps more correctly defined as uneasiness and flurry. By no physical means can we cause a girl to blush, nor can we teach her how to feign a blush. There may be a feigned merriment and a false laughter, but there is no unreal blush.

Much has been attained on the stage, but not the blush. Seneca saw this and said that the Roman players were "unable to blush in acting shame." Even pallor at will seems possible, but not coloring up. The true blush is involuntary, and comes against the will. It comes and goes absolutely without invitation. It is the instant echo of a thought, and from this point of view is full of suggestiveness. The albino of a white race blushes

Helen Keller, Blind, Deaf and Mute, Is a Living Proof of the Theory That a Blush Springs From the Soul and Not From a Sensation Caused by Sight, Hearing or Speaking. She Blushes as Frequently as Any Woman in Possession of All of Her Senses.

freely. Taylor also says that negro albinos blush freely. This makes it probable that the opinion that the black African blushes is correct, and that in his race the blush is expressed, not by redness of the cheeks but by a deepening of the black. Indeed, the red color of the blood spreading beneath the dark pigment might be expected, as Burgess points out, to give to the black a deeper tint. If this is true, there can be no hesitation in accepting it as a true and real blush.

Hybrids, mulattoes, or crosses between blacks and whites, are well-known to blush as freely and fully as pure whites. And there is no question as to the blush appearing in brown and yellow races. It is certainly not a phenomenon belonging exclusively to the white race. It belongs to all mankind, and to man only of all animals. It seems to follow that the mental state, which excites it, is experienced by man in every condition in which he has been found.

It is said that Sir Thomas Lawrence told Fanny Kemble that he never drew himself mad in attempting to paint a blush, which he calls "the most extrorinary incident in a woman's face." The result of his efforts was merely a red complexion—at most a flush, with no chance of its being taken by any one for a blush.

Before the blush of shame can appear the blusher must possess some reason and understanding. This is needed to call up the state of mind, which in turn calls up the blush. Hence the deeply idiotic are said never to blush. For the same reason it is said that infants do not blush. But blushing begins at an early age. It seems beyond question that it may occur at the age of four. We cannot, however, explain in this way why the habit of blushing wears away in advancing years and may disappear altogether in old age, nor can we explain in this way why women blush more frequently than men.

What seems to happen is this: Reason and understanding after youth is over are strong enough to show that there is really no cause for feeling a sense of shame at the usually trivial things which bring up that feeling in the young, whether these things relate to faults or to embarrassing or unbecoming situations. All the things which raise the blush of shame so freely in the young are really trivial in their nature. They are never of grave or serious import. No blush accordingly attends them when grown up persons have come to see their triviality. They do not feel the shame that raises the blush. Hence in advanced life blushing is rare.

The greater blushing of women is probably explained by their continuing longer in the condition of youth, and so failing for a longer time to realize the unimportant and trifling character of what ordinarily raises the blush.

It is beyond question that deaf-mutes blush in all respects as ordinary hearing persons do, and that is what we might expect, for though they do not hear what is said by onlookers or bystanders they see them and they easily perceive anything in their minds which would provoke blushing in those who hear as well as see.

It is also beyond question that blushing appears among those born blind. I have made a careful inquiry on this subject, and find that young persons of both sexes, who are congenitally blind, are often great blushers. They do not see the onlookers, but they hear what is said. They are often appreciative that more persons are present and looking at them, than are really present, and this itself is apt to raise the mental state out of which a blush arises. They themselves, indeed, give this explanation, and say that they would not have blushed if they had known that only so-and-so were present.

Regarding Miss Helen Keller, the well-known American blind marvel, I have trustworthy information. Her governess once wrote me that Miss Keller "blushes much as other people do," that "she blushes at the thought of having made a mistake in answering a question, or under criticism, or when her feelings are hurt." The governess also said: "She does not, I believe, blush increasingly as she grows older; she is conscious of blushing, and sometimes rubs her face impatiently; her blushes spread over her neck and shoulders; she said, when I asked her in reference to your letter, that she felt a blush tingling all over her."

In all broad aspects, the blushing of Miss Keller is exactly the same as that of well educated and red-blooded girls. She never saw other girls blush; she does not know by hearing or sight whether strangers or acquaintances are present; she does, however, in point of fact, know much more of whether persons are present and who they are than can be easily explained. Her blushing girls have no relation to looks or words of disapproval connected either with her appearance or conduct; yet she blushes just as girls do who see and hear, from the same causes, over the same parts of the body, and with the same experience of tingling. It is a bodily manifestation of a mental state, and of that only, and it can neither be called up nor kept back by the will.

How You May Cure All Corns and Prevent Their Return

CORNS cannot only be got rid of but can be prevented from growing again. The best methods are described in the Lancet by Dr. Paul Bernard Roth, surgeon of the Kensington General Hospital, senior orthopedic clinical assistant of the London Hospital and captain in the army medical corps. Following are his directions for getting rid of a corn:

The foot is soaked in hot water (105 degrees Fahrenheit) for half an hour, and the hard part of the corn is then gently rubbed away with a file and glacial acetic acid applied to the base of it. It is then covered with India rubber sheeting of the same quality as that used by dentists in making a rubber dam, fixed in position by two elastic bands around the foot or toe, one distal and one proximal to the corn. This is removed morning and evening and the acid applied for two or three days until the site of the corn begins to feel tender. Application of the acid is then stopped and the rubber covering used alone. By this time the corn with the immediately surrounding skin is white and dead looking. After another two days, if not before, the core of it can be completely removed by rubbing firmly with a coarse swab. The rubber is now left off altogether; linseed spread with boric ointment is applied to the site of the corn and reapplied twice daily for two or three days more. The surrounding parts then soon regain their normal appearance.

For this treatment to be effective the patient should not use the foot while it is being applied. If the corn is inflamed the inflammation must be entirely relieved by fomentations and rest in bed before the treatment can be carried out.

To prevent its recurrence the causes producing it must be removed, the commonest of these being contracted toes and improperly shaped boots. The toes must be straightened. Sometimes a trifling cut of the tendons is necessary. Thereafter the toes must be gently stretched morning and evening with the patient's own fingers, and this must be kept up for several months.

"Having got the toes straight and having removed the corns, it is now essential that the patient be fitted with boots the shape of his feet. These must be made to measure on fresh lasts by a skilled boot-maker. It is useless to attempt to fit such a patient with ready-made boots or shoes. For often one foot is one-quarter to one-half inch longer than the other, and when one boot is a good fit the other is too big or too small. Also, only rarely is the boot broad enough in the tread to allow the foot to spread properly, and it is almost invariably the wrong shape—that is, instead of being straight on the inside with the end of the boot opposite to the big toe, the end is opposite the third toe, so that the former is pushed out."

Dr. Roth recommends digitated socks for overlapping toes, but says they will cause blisters unless they fit perfectly. It is better to get socks half a size too large and convert them into digitated socks by sewing, thus making pockets for only those toes that need them.

Nourishment Now to Be Extracted From Ground Wood

WOOD now to be mixed with the fodder of domestic animals and even added to the diet of human beings was advocated by Professor G. Haberlandt, a recent address before the Royal Prussian Academy of Sciences. The Literary Digest prints a synopsis of this address, from which it appears that "there is a large amount of nutritive substance in the wood of deciduous trees, a less quantity being found in that of conifers."

Especially in winter the sap wood of the elm, beech, maple, poplar, alder, ash, birch, aspen, linden and others contains sugar, starch and oil. Professor Haberlandt found 28 per cent of starch in the sap wood of a 15-year-old elm in March.

The dead heart wood is almost destitute of these nutritious substances, but the smaller branches and twigs are rich in them, while the bark contains too much tannin.

Ideas of Amateur Inventors

An Iceless Ice Box
MOSQUITO NETTING

FOR the housewife who is unable to obtain ice this box is a great convenience, for it will keep milk sweet and cool through the longest and hottest summer days.

Procure a stout box two feet wide by four feet long, or make one of plank. Screen the open front and back, making a door for the front. Then cover the top with oilcloth, letting it hang down far enough to cover the screened part in case of storm or rain. Roll the oilcloth up and fasten it to the top when not in use. The box should then be put on legs at least two feet high. The north side of the house is the best place for it, standing it so that it is sheltered from the sun, and the air can blow through it.

Put the milk vessels in and place a pan of water on them in such a way that a cloth put over the pan will absorb the water and hang down over the vessels.

The evaporation cools the milk and a panful of water twice a day will be sufficient.

A New Fuel Saver

HERE is a rough sketch of an invention of mine which is giving great satisfaction in our home and will work in any coal range, so you can burn wood at a great economy of fuel. Also the range can be heated up more quickly for baking. It is simply a short piece of cast iron sewer pipe drilled full of half-inch holes and placed over the lower grates of the stove. This raises the fire up nearer the stove side, which heats up quicker and saves half of the fuel. The combustion is much more perfect.

Nervous Indigestion a Myth—You Can't Have It if You Try

IN THE introduction to his new book on diseases of the alimentary canal Dr. Mark I. Knapp of New York has some severe things to say to physicians who blame on the nerves every trouble they cannot understand.

"The vagus especially," he says—"the vagus being a great nerve that arises in the brain and supplies the mouth, heart and stomach," "has been singled out by the brunt of responsibility for the miseries comprised under the term of nervous indigestion. By so doing the writers at once positively identify the culprit; it is the vagus, we are told. Notwithstanding the certainty, and the comparative ease of searching for the lesion, no lesion has yet been found anywhere in the course of the nerve. This, however, does not deter those who wish to give the explanation of nervousness. As a dyspeptic is called nervous, which is inferred from a general excitable condition of the patient, we must assume the presence of both the dyspepsia and excitability. Excitability is ascribed to a peculiar influence upon the nervous system."

Dr. Knapp goes on to point out that the nervous system gets its nourishment from the blood; that blood is only the end product of digestion; that bad digestion makes bad blood and bad blood inevitably makes the nervous system suffer.

Brain Workers Need Meat, Not Vegetable Nourishment

THE editor of the New York Medical Journal has been searching the biographies of brain workers to find one who has been exclusively a vegetarian. He has found several who tried a vegetarian diet and gave it up, but failed to find any who persisted in it.

He cites Benjamin Franklin, who "stuck for a year or more to his resolution to eat no animal food, and looked upon the taking of animal life for purposes of food as a kind of unprovoked murder." But when he saw small fish removed from the stomachs of larger ones he reasoned: "If I eat one another, I do not see why we may not eat you," so he dined upon cod very heartily.

Then there was Herbert Spencer, who, after six months of vegetarianism, found himself deteriorating and returned to a use of animal food.

And Tolstoy, who at 87 adopted a vegetarian diet and adhered to it throughout the remaining twenty-five years of his life, completed his greatest work before he began this diet, "and his friends believed he suffered generally from the new regimen."

Even Thomas Jefferson, who was a genuine epicure in vegetables and cultivated great quantities of them for his table, felt the need of flesh as at least "a condiment." Just what he meant by this expression we are left to guess, but evidently he found his digestion improved and his general activity heightened. Apparently meat extractions have such an effect upon digestion, and a surplussage of protein seems to quicken general metabolism.

The new 1916 Maxwell shatters all low "first-cost" records for a real automobile. Think of it—a full 5-passenger car—an absolutely complete car, with electric starter, electric lights, high-tension magneto, and every refinement—a luxurious car—a beautiful car—a powerful 50-mile-an-hour-car,—yet a light-weight real economy car—for $655

All Low "After-Cost" Records Broken

The "first cost" of an automobile is a big consideration to any sane man, but the "after cost" is an even bigger consideration to any man who wants to remain sane in his automobile investment.

The "after cost" or upkeep is what a car costs you to maintain, run, and enjoy, after you have bought it, and it is mighty hard to enjoy an automobile if it costs you too much to run.

The Maxwell has lowered all economy records for:

- 1st—Miles per set of tires
- 2nd—Miles per gallon of gasoline
- 3rd—Miles per quart of lubricating oil
- 4th—Lowest year-in-and-year-out repair bills

IS THIS THE WICKEDEST FACE IN THE WORLD?

Its Owner Does Not Deny That It May Be, Since Scientists Have Said That she Is the Reincarnation of the World's Wickedest Women and That Their Crimes Have Chiseled the Lines of Her Features

HAVE the physical attributes of scheming Delilah, of cruel Lucretia Borgia, or of diabolical Elizabeth Bathory, faithfully found reincarnation that the women of this age may see face to face the loathsome depths to which the worst of their sex have descended? Are the souls of those monsters of ancient and medieval times welded with others to form the soul of Mlle. Theda Bara, the moving picture actress known as the most wicked-faced woman in the world? Mlle. Bara, confronted by inquiring professors of science, cannot answer. She looks in a mirror and sees a sinful face; she inquires of her soul and the answer comes that she has lived before—has desired as I know it in life. I can simply say that in playing the parts of wicked characters, such characters as the vampire, Iet, in 'The Clemenceau Case,' and La Gioconda in 'The Devil's Daughter,' I feel that what they do and what I do is quite right. What I mean is that I could readily do in actual life as they did in the fictional world if the great inclination came. Yet I have never been other than normal in my desires, living quite as righteously as my fellow mortals. "I once was led to consult a professor of astrology and palmistry. He told me many things which have come true. He told me that his science showed I had passed through various incarnations, that my soul was many-sided, that it had fallen as low as human spirit could fall and also had touched the sun-dial heights. "He told me I would seek the applause lived as the companion and crony of crime—yet her heart sings the song of the righteous and she has no fear that phantom forms will drag her to perform in this life the deeds she enacts in pantomime before the moving picture camera.

Amazed at Mlle. Bara's powerful presentation of the promptings of hate, lust, cunning, hypocrisy, revenge, anger and spite, scientists searchingly have questioned her to secure fresh evidence to support their half-proved laws of transmigration of souls, of reincarnation of personality.

Here's the Explanation.

And to their questions Mlle. Bara answers:

"You say I have the most wicked face of any woman. You say my hair is like the serpent locks of Medusa, that my eyes have the cruel cunning of Borgia, that my mouth is the mouth of the sinister, scheming Delilah, that my hands are like the talons of a Chere or the blood-bathing Elizabeth Bathory. And then you ask me of my soul—you wish to know if it is reflected in my face.

"The belief that I have lived before and have taken many parts on this world's stage has a strong hold on my imagination. "The most powerful appeal of any literature I have ever known is the simple verse:

*Or ever the brightly years were gone
With the old sword to the grove,
When I was a king in Babylon
And you were a Christian slave.
'It is not easy to tell the sensation of* of multitudes. He told me what has come true, that in playing my part in life I would find my many-sided self playing my parts for me, that in the enactment of the parts I would lose my original, my normal self and live for the time apart from my actual surroundings."

Students of sociology and phenology see an unusual parallel in the recorded physical characteristics of Elizabeth Bathory and Mlle. Bara. Compared with the horrible career of Elizabeth Bathory, that of Lucretia Borgia seems like that of a peaceful peasant.

Elizabeth Bathory lived almost alone in the famous Castle Osejthe in Hungary about 1624. Lucretia Borgia poisoned a handful, but Lady Bathory slew no less than 800 girls and young women—not for revenge, but that she might bathe daily in their blood and thus retain her beauty.

Lady Bathory lived with only two serv-

Muscular System of a Serpent

By EMILY H. VAUGHT.
Phrenologist and Physiognomist.

I WRITE this with a photograph of Theda Bara before me. Never in all my experience as a professional character reader have I gazed into a face portraying such wickedness and evil—such characteristics of the vampire and the sorceress.

Theda Bara belongs to what we term the wide-faced, muscular type of people, whose bones are slender and small, and who are governed by the same muscular system as the serpent. They are sinuous like the serpent, and, as if the characteristics of a reptile were not enough, they have a feline temperament, deliberately taking pains to inflict suffering on others—and because of their destructiveness as a faculty they have a very keen sense, understanding, and appreciation of evil.

Those of her type yearn for the luxuries of life, but never plod nor struggle to obtain them. They would rather practice the art of the burglar, the sneak-thief or the adventurer to possess the things their soul craves.

As I study the features of this unusual girl I note particularly the width of her head and face and the expression of her eyes. They denote intellect, a keen mind, and a responsive nature. That she is not what her facial characteristics would indicate, that is, a vampire off the screen as well as on, is shown by the height of her head above the eyes.

In other words Theda Bara has a very wicked, cruel and evil face, but she is not wicked, cruel and evil. Unlike the glib, who never scent evil, she has a sense of evil. This, evidently, is a gift which the motion picture producers failed to recognize.

ants, old women who, it is said, were feeble-minded and cared little what their mistress did. For years their haughty mistress lured scores upon scores of young girls to her castle, tempting them with rich offers of wealth if they would enter her employ as maid servants.

For a time the girls would lead a happy life. But just as sure as the seasons changed, just so soon would their proud mistresses grow hysterically fearful that her beauty was waning and the girls were led to their slaughter.

Slaughtered by Doll.

These unfortunate creatures were conducted to the cellar of the castle, and here, presumably in a state of nature, were compelled to walk toward the figure of a large doll. This doll was a diabolical machine, in the construction of which a number of two-edged knives as sharp as razors had been introduced.

In approaching this hideous invention the victim unwittingly released a hidden spring, which set the machine in action. Like a living fiend the outstretched arms of the doll grasped the poor girl in a death embrace, and before she had a chance to withdraw from its clutches literally cut her to pieces. The blood from the body was conducted by small channels to a bath close by, in which Elizabeth is said to have bathed, thinking thereby to preserve her beauty.

These atrocities went on for ten years, until one of the girls enticed to the castle managed to get in communication with her sweetheart, who rescued her after surmounting great difficulties, and brought about the death of Elizabeth Bathory.

Endless Possibilities for Film.

It is said that Mlle. Bara may yet be asked to play the part in a thrilling film drama built about the terrible history of Osejthe Castle. When the great stage is set for the scenes Mlle. Bara will glide forth in her famous serpentine, gracefully undulating way to play what may be her most famous part of treachery and blood. Will her mind, obsessed with the part she plays, call into flaming life the smoldering desires of a soul reborn and will the world through some strange trick of laws far beyond the knowledge of our wisest men be given a true picture of history's worst woman—the beautiful woman who bathed in blood until, transformed, she bore the world's most wicked face?

FIFTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

Kitty Gray, newspaper woman, finds in a curio shop half of a broken coin, the mutilated inscription on which arouses her curiosity and leads her on the order of her managing editor, to go to the principality of Grethoffen to leave the army, suggested by the inscription, she is followed, and on arrival in Grethoffen her adventures while chasing the secret of the broken coin begin.

CHAPTER XVII.

A New Intruder.

The keen senses of Roleau, schooled in peril, told him of some hidden danger—the very tenaciousness of the situation warning him. Turning, he saw the upraised sword, and in a flash a blow from his own powerful arm had sent it flying through the window. It fell clinking on the floor at the feet of Count Sachio and his friends. Kitty, rescued from a danger which she had not realized, sprang back. An instant later Roleau had grappled with the intruder.

Hearing the sound of this encounter, Count Sachio and his companions sprang at the intervening door, broke it in. They found two strange men engaged in an encounter whose cause they could not guess, but both of whom undoubtedly were intruders in this place, and they, therefore, might be regarded as enemies.

"The American!" exclaimed Sachio, as now he saw also the young girl, who was endeavoring to best the might to give assistance to Roleau in his struggle with the stranger.

"Quick, excellency, run!" exclaimed Roleau. The strange man was not so easily to be disposed of, but gave even the powerful Roleau all he liked to do to handle him. Meantime Sachio flung himself upon Roleau, his comrades did as much for the stranger.

In the melee, which slipped from place to place upon the floor, Sachio left the little bag with the king's half coin—in his excitement he had forgotten that he still held it in his hand. The stranger, whose shifty eyesight was watching the bag as it lay upon the floor. That was the object of his errand here! Once he had that in his grasp, he asked for nothing more.

Working gradually towards the place where the little bag lay, now underfoot, now scuffed aside by the struggling men, the stranger managed to trip and throw that one of Sachio's friends who pressed him most closely. They fell directly before the pocket. Swiftly, the long hand of the stranger reached out and caught it up.

There remained for him no more relish for the fight. An instant later, his crossed arm against the throat of his assailant, he broke away, flung through the open window and left the others to shift as they might.

Roleau, still held in the powerful grasp of Count Sachio himself, struggled furiously, all the time calling to Kitty to make her own escape.

"Roleau!" called Kitty. "Quick, he has it! He has stolen it. We must follow him!" And Roleau did his best to shake himself free.

"Not so fast," he cried, "panted Sachio, whose stern grip still held the Roleau's collar. "You will not get off just yet. Who are you, to come prowling about my place—thieves against thieves? You shall tell me all that is in your mind."

"Oh, excellency, run!" panted Roleau, still in his mistress. "Leave them to me. I'll come when I can." Kitty turned, knowing that she must act quickly or be taken prisoner herself.

"Follow me, Roleau!" she cried. "Follow me when you can. I'll leave a trail." And as she caught up a book from the table Roleau guessed what she had meant by this—she had seen him elsewhere before now. Where could that have been? Ransacking her memory she concluded that he must have been some one of the band of banditti who had surprised her and her companions in the desert.

Trusting to fortune to bring her aid, she ran forward in the general direction which she supposed the man had taken. She passed from the floor of the gallery, which she had seen him enter, to the softer ground where she might see the trail, and caught it now. He was running in great leaps towards the edge of the forest, where the road came in. Yonder lay the trail to Grethoffen. He seemed bound for that. Yes—she presently heard a sound of horse's hoofs. The intruder was off, before him lying the open road across the desert.

"Horses!" thought Kitty to herself, recalling the stables where some of the king's mounts were kept—indeed, she doubted not that some might be saddled and waiting in the yard. It was true—an instant later her own flying footsteps pursued those now lessening in the distance. And as she fled Kitty left a trail.

As for Roleau, his faithful heart was wellnigh broken when, having seen his mistress follow his advice and make her escape, he found himself in spite of all unable to join her in the pursuit of the escaping thief who had their coin. The grasp of Sachio upon him did not relax, and now others reinforced their leader. In a moment Roleau had been reduced to as passive a condition as that in which he so recently had left another who had undertaken the dangerous quest of the king's coin. Finding himself helpless, at length he relaxed his tense muscles, ceded to the hands of his captors, composed himself as the athlete does who knows there is a continued struggle ahead of him, reserving his powers for the moment of the greater need.

"Ah, well, messieurs," he said grinning, at length, "you have the argument."

Sachio and his men led him out into the main room where, panting, he was thrown upon a chair. "Search him!" exclaimed Sachio. "I have lost the coin. It was here. It is gone—he has it about him somewhere."

The companions of the count complied, but could make nothing of the search, Roleau stoutly asserting that he knew nothing of it and had it not in his possession.

"I dropped it on the floor in the scuffle," exclaimed Sachio. "Surely this man must have it, or it has wings! I had it in my hand but now, this very moment, that American—surely she is a witch. Did she take it, fellow? Tell me!" He turned furiously upon Roleau.

"Monsieur, how can I tell?" replied the latter. "I do not know. I was too busy to see what was going on except that he was good for nothing."

Count Sachio walked up and down the floor, agitated, angry. "Robbed of both halves of the cursed coin!" he exclaimed, turning to his friends once more, before whom he had been but now so thanklessly boasting. "This was the king's half—it came from King Michael himself, who was so famous as to give it away to yonder young American, whoever she may be. And here am I, who expected by this time to have both pieces in my hand—I have neither!"

At last, however, there came the sound of one riding furiously.

"On guard, gentlemen!" exclaimed Sachio. "We do not know who comes—I hope it may be Rudolph."

It was indeed this missing stranger—the man who had been left behind in Frederick's apartments.

He came now, excited, breathing wrath against all the world. For one instant as he held open the door he hesitated, then seeing Roleau sitting bound, flung himself upon him with a cry of vengeance.

It should be understood now that when Count Frederick had returned to his own apartments and found his private room occupied by a man who evidently had been there for no good purpose—a man left trussed up and bound by yet other intruders—he had had some parley with the helpless intruder, of learning what had been the cause of his strange plight.

"I know you, fellow," said he. "You are of Count Sachio's suite. You have been quartered here with him as a guest of this house—and now you would rob me? Your master has gone—your mean to rob your master's host and friend. Who, then, found you and left you here?"

"Your excellency," exclaimed Rudolph, "spare me! I was found here in your room, it is true, or near to it, at least, and was set upon by a ruffian and a young woman. Between them they bound me and left me helpless—flung me into your room here as you see. I ask no belief of you. Take me to Count Sachio—I am his man. Let him plead for me. I shall make no plea at all."

Count Frederick found upon the floor a little kerchief, which told him much. He picked it up, gazing at it strangely. A sudden wave of admiration once more crossed his soul at the daring of this young woman, who seemed to be here, there and everywhere, whose trails of late so strangely crossed his own in every possible situation of life.

"Very well," said he to Rudolph, "that is precisely what I shall do. We shall go to find your master, Count Sachio. There has been too much mystery of late; perhaps he can explain a part of it."

It was thus, therefore, that Count Frederick and his new passenger had come in a swift car from Grethoffen direct to the lodge of Count Sachio, beyond the neutral lands. And having arrived at the chateau Rudolph had lost no time in singling himself from the car and hastening to explain to his master that absence which he knew would be so resented. Seeing Roleau there in advance of him and bound—his own rage overcame him and he lost not an instant in casting himself upon Count Sachio's prisoner.

This was not altogether a fortunate matter for any; for Roleau, surprised at the attack, and by this time somewhat in possession of recuperated powers, made so stern a beate at his bonds that he broke them; and thereupon addressing himself to the combat once more, soon gave Rudolph all he liked to do.

Meantime Count Frederick, thinking it well to guard all exits of the chateau, himself had gone to the rear, and had found the open window at which Kitty and the stranger had escaped. What he now saw, therefore, in the main room, was his own late prisoner engaged in conflict with Count Sachio's prisoner! For the moment he grunted in admiration of the prowess of his own late retainer, Roleau, who seemed to have deserted him for the service of the young American.

"They find him a Tartar!" exclaimed he to himself, for at that moment Roleau, casting Rudolph aside, made for the outer door of the chateau.

"Stop!" cried Count Sachio loudly, as others would have followed him. "It is useless! Wait—he has not the coin. Why waste time on him?"

They fell back as the count once more took charge of this complicated situation.

"Excellency, no—I have failed. That man—he pointed to the door where Roleau had fled—he and a young woman caught me even as I was searching for it where you directed me. They fell on me and trussed me up and left me helpless. I stayed there until the master of the place came. It was he who brought me hither—I told him you would make any explanation that could be made."

"And a fine explanation anyone can make!" exclaimed Count Sachio bitterly. "I am helpless—I shall be suspected. You cannot tell what consequences may follow your own failure."

Outside the chateau there now were two, both of whom were eager enough to leave the place, since longer tarrying could be good for neither—Count Frederick and his late servant, Roleau. The car of Count Frederick still remained for him—that of Count Sachio stood in the front yard of the chateau. A moment later the purr of both motors might have been heard as they whirled out into the road toward Grethoffen! There remained behind them the plotters of the rival kingdom, now left to nurse their own impotent wrath at their own headquarters in Count Sachio's hunting lodge.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Apaches.

The man who had proved himself the last possessor of the king's half of the Grethoffen coin was the most unworthy of any thus far concerned in its destinies. True, Kitty's recollection had been correct—she had indeed seen him among Landolzi's condottieri. Yet lawless as the members of that band were, he scarce was fit to claim comradeship with them.

His name in truth was Blake—a renegade Englishman, who had for some time belonged to the underworld of the capital of Grethoffen. If, animated by some greater ambition of his own, he now and then joined the hands of the desert rovers, his real preference was for the underworld of the city, where, with his comrades of the cheaper thieving gang, he might for the most part make or had made his life, not concerned in deeds of activity or daring. It had been by mere chance of his prowling nature that he had learned something about the ownership of the broken coin—had guessed that it might have some value, and had resolved to possess himself of it.

the desert, not so far away in their own rendezvous, were gathered for an evening's converse—a dozen or more of Landolzi's band of desert riders, half fellows well met, friends of the king's troops and enemies, as they boasted, of none but the rich. Their headquarters, as was generally known, lay a little way back on the cross-trail of the main road, between the two kingdoms of Grethoffen and Grethoffen, which crossed midway of the neutral lands.

When Kitty fled after the thief Blake, it was at first with no definite purpose of her own; but she had not gone far before she realized that alone she could accomplish little against such men as he; and she doubted not that he was on his way to join his comrades. What then was there to do? Who could aid her?

Even as she rode the thought came to Kitty's mind of the debonair bandit leader, Landolzi, the same who had so gallantly freed her and escorted her to the city's gates but a short time before. She was woman enough to know the impression she had made on the bandit chief—and shrewd enough also to hit upon him as an ally in her own plans. Therefore, as Kitty was now—not so fast as not to leave abundant bits of paper on the trail so that Roleau might be able to track her—it was not towards any citadel of the law—not to Grethoffen town itself—but towards the capital of law of law, the rendezvous of the ragged banditti of the desert.

They sat, these rude and careless folk, ill clad, ragged, yet not ill content, under the sheltering rocks which made their lair or den on the cross-caught sight of the young woman standing there, disheveled, pale. "Do you not know this excellency? What, would you insult her?"

"I came hither for help," exclaimed Kitty, addressing him with such appeal in her eyes as any man would have found it difficult to resist. "I am in need—I am in pursuit of a thief and I—"

"And you ask a thief to catch a thief?" The bandit chieftain smiled grimly.

"No, not in the least—I do not call you, you brute, to do the desert. You yourself, Captain Landolzi, told me to come to you if I needed help. Well, I need it now, tonight, this very moment! I am all alone. I need conduct to Grethoffen town. I am convinced that the man who robbed me fled thither. What would you allow one to escape who would rob a woman?"

"No," exclaimed Landolzi. "That is not our trade. It is our profession that we take only from the rich, and we do not side with those who rob the weak. Excellency, my word is my word. You come to us for aid, and we should be barren of all honor did we not give you aid. What can we do?"

"Ride with me!" exclaimed Kitty. "Tous—two or three men—what men the way from here to Grethoffen. Shield me against any other possible riders who may not be of your brotherhood. Is it agreed?"

"It is agreed!" exclaimed Landolzi.

CHAPTER XX.

The Sewer Rats.

"Who was the thief that robbed you, excellency?" demanded Landolzi, as they drew up near the edge of the city—did you see him well?"

"Perfectly," said Kitty. "Moreover, I am sure I have seen him before."

"Where?"

"With your own hand, monsieur—he was one of those who rode with you the other day!"

"Ah, a slim man—sharp face—white?"

"Precisely—the same."

"I know him—Blake! He was with us that day, yes, but I promise you he is not really of our brotherhood. He is not worthy of association with gallant gentlemen like ourselves. We ride the trails—he creeps through the alleys of the city. We are borderers—he is a common thief. Blake—truly, it must have been he. No one of our own gang would have robbed me. Now I shall have the help me in your own quest. I know Blake's lurking place. He and his kind have a sort of a den in the low quarter of the town. The prefect of police leaves them pretty much alone, because in these times the officers of the law have much else to think about. Their optimum lair—their den for stolen goods—yes, yes, I know. But dare you go with me?"

"I must dare it," said Kitty firmly. "Perhaps my friends will follow me—I do not know—but even if not, you and I must get back what he has stolen from me."

"And what was it, excellency?"

"No more than a broken bit of coin, captain, of value to none as it is now, of great value to me provided I can attain it and the other half."

"You need say no more. The errand is enough to interest me—because now I shall have the low Blake where I have longed to find him. He shall not ride with us again. But come," he added.

They found their way through the darkening streets in the purlieu of Grethoffen town. Under the leadership of the chieftain they threaded street after street, alley after alley, until at length their party descended into a deep gully in a less important portion of the city. A faint light showed through the chinks of a wall which seemed to be the facing of a bank, but which really concealed some sort of den.

"Yonder, excellency," whispered Landolzi, "is the place where they hole up—like rats in a sewer—and they have no more principles—they are worthy of no more. Come, my men, close in."

He pushed against the door which showed the gleams of light, and hastened into a sort of passageway. Their entry attracted no attention for the time.

Only two of the gang remained, the others having descended on one errand or other of their own. When Kitty and her companion looked through the little window, which gave in upon the recess under the bluff, they saw sitting close to the table two men—Blake, the renegade, and another of his band. The keen eyes of Kitty detected Blake's hand lying upon the table—and near it the object which she sought—the missing coin!

"Quick," whispered Landolzi, and as he spoke he broke into the room. Without hesitation he flung himself upon Blake, and Kitty, wishing to be of service, and finding no better means, caught up an empty bottle which stood near and dealt so interesting a blow upon the head of the remaining ruffian as to put him out of the combat for the time. An instant later she had caught from the table the coveted coin.

"Let him go, Landolzi—quick! Come! I have got it!" she exclaimed. And an instant later she was in the passageway once more.

She had almost made her way out into the open, when in the semidarkness she felt a strong hand catch at her wrist—heard a low laugh at her ear.

"Roleau!" she cried aloud.

"No, not Roleau," said a voice she knew well enough—the voice of the Count Frederick.

"So you have it! Very well, cling to it, then—but don't drop it. To prevent that I will even hold your hand in mine."

"You brute!" exclaimed Kitty, sobbing now in the intensity of her emotions—"after all I have done to get it. And it is mine!"

"Why argue it, my dear young lady?" exclaimed Count Frederick. "I have told you I must have it. I regret as much as you that I must disturb you."

"Release me!" she cried.

Panting, she looked up at him in the half light. What she saw was a face grim and full of purpose—a face which it seemed to her she would always hate to get it. And it was mine! There was no trace of any fear.

"Come," he said and flung an arm about her waist as he stepped toward the open. "Let Roleau fend for himself—I am satisfied with what I have."

An instant later he halted. From what sounds he heard at the rear, he knew escape was cut off there. And now crowding in at the entrance of the passageway in which they stood, there came yet others of the thieves' band, barring exit there as well.

As he fled now, therefore, he made not for the desert so much as for the purlieu of Grethoffen town itself. When at length, after his long ride across the neutral country, he found himself once more near to what he called home, he cast aside his horse and completed his journey on foot.

At the door of the underground dive, where he counted upon meeting most of his friends, he made the usual sign of admission. It was a choice hand of kindred souls who rose to greet him as he entered. They asked of him what he had.

"What have I done—what have I taken?" Swagging, he pushed them aside and threw on the table in the center of the room a bit of coin which he took from his pocket.

"Something, comrades, I am thinking," a roar of laughter broke from them, as a motley group, they surrounded him.

"He is a fully jester, it is not so, my brothers!" exclaimed one. "A coin! If it were whole it might be worth perhaps a lira or so, but broken—it is worthless. What can we get for this in a bank, my brothers? So, Blake, is this your day's work?"

"You may laugh, comrades," said he, "all you like; at the same time, I venture you that coin will be worth something to us before we are done with it."

"What is it?" exclaimed one, curiously, examining the inscription. "An old Roman coin, do you think?"

"True, there is a mystery about it, my brothers, never doubt that. It is a mystery that will pay well when solved. Besides, it might act as some sort of safeguard for us. There has been plenty of talk of late that our band may need friends to keep us from the noose. Very well, then—I think the ownership of this coin at least will give us friends when we may need them. Guard it well, that same broken coin, my brothers."

"What do you mean?" asked the spokesman curiously. "Who has sought it, then?"

"Such men as Count Sachio of Grethoffen. It was of him I took it. There was pursuing it, also, that same young American—and that ruffian of hers, who serves her so like a dog—Roleau, I heard her call him. My word, he had a grip of steel in his hands—he well might do for me before I could make my escape. I saw Count Sachio drop the coin upon the floor. I threw my man so I could pick it up, and then I fled. My word to you, brothers, I fled at speed! So, here I am."

It was he, the man whom they all respected through their fears. He flung himself from his horse now and strode into the lighted circle.

"What now, fellows?" exclaimed he, as he road in the neutral lands. Cooking, eating, drinking, they spent the hours of their day in a morose mentality than theirs would spend it—joking, conversing, talking of what they had done, vamping of what they were about to do. Most prominently in the minds seemed to linger the memory of their little expedition in which they had taken prisoner the Count Frederick and the beautiful young American.

"And the chief let that prize go?" grumbled one. "Out of the whole enterprise we got nothing, absolutely nothing. What the devil gave us would have made two lire apiece, divided fairly among our band. The main prize—the young woman—we got nothing for her whatever. And yet, what a chance for ransom!"

"Such a chance does not come often. But I wonder where the chief himself is tonight. And are the pickets out down the road? In these times we cannot be too careful, for they say that between the two kingdoms war may come, and if so it would be but our luck for one of the armies to ask us to recruit with them."

"Go, you fellows, two of you," instructed one who seemed to be some sort of lieutenant. "Step out and scout down the road a bit."

It was not long after this that the men left at the rendezvous heard in the darkness a woman's scream. With this came the laughing shout of their comrades. A moment more they bore into the light of the circle between them a young woman!

"Ho, brothers!" cried the ruffian who held Kitty in his arms. By the Lord, 'tis the same!—'tis the young American highness whom we lost!"

"Loose me! Let me free!" cried Kitty vehemently—"I came to you for help. I trusted in you. I am in need and I ask you gentlemen to be my friends."

"What, your friends?" They laughed loudly at this.

Yes, your leader knows me—do you not remember how he took us captive the other day? He told me then that if I needed aid to count on him. Does one of your brotherhood speak falsely?"

They fell back from her now respectfully, impressed in part by what she said, and in part by the fear that they might offend their leader. This latter fear was well placed, for even now they heard the sounds of rapid footsteps.

"Halt!" exclaimed one, "Landolzi—it is very likely he."

And it was he, the man whom they all respected through their fears. He flung himself from his horse now and strode into the lighted circle.

"What now, fellows?" exclaimed he, as he

NO GRAFTERS NAMED BY BECKER ATTORNEY

Martin Manton Denies He Gave Governor Whitman
Names of Five Men.

New York, July 31.—Martin T. Manton issued a statement here today in which he denied emphatically that he had given Governor Whitman the names of five men implicated with Charles Becker in the alleged grafting case. The statement opened with the assertion that a New York newspaper yesterday quoted the governor as saying Mr. Manton had named five men—two dead and three living.

"I had nothing to do with the case," said Mr. Manton in his statement, "for the purpose of asking him, in view of the fact that he was the prosecutor who brought about Becker's conviction, to take the advice of some eminent citizen concerning the action that should be taken by him as governor in respect to enforcing the sentence of death I told the governor that Becker would answer any questions propounded to him by such a committee. The governor then said: 'Manton, you need not name the names you want to, but can Becker give me anything on this municipal administration?'"

"I replied: 'I do not know. You had better get that first hand from Becker's lips.' He then went on to mention four names, three of which he said were of men not now important. One, however, was the name of a person now holding high public office in the city. Concerning that name, he said he had anything to do with it. I replied: 'I do not know. You had better answer any questions your committee may ask him.' Mr. Manton declined to make public the names of the men he named, the governor mentioned."

European War Turns Carlebad Devotees to Bedford Springs.

Bedford Springs, Pa., July 30, 1915.—With Carlebad, Maribad and the other famous spas of Europe closed to tourists, those Americans who formerly sought health, rest, or enjoyment on the other side are finding Bedford Springs a most excellent substitute for the German "Baths."

In all its more than thirty years of existence, Bedford Springs has never enjoyed a greater season than the present one. Just as in the case of the European health resorts, the famous American spa is noted for its social activity and for its health giving waters. Water, rides and walks among the delightful scenery of the Allegheny foothills, golf, tennis and bowling as pastimes, air hand and croquet, and in the afternoon, with dancing every evening, add immensely to the gaiety of the visitors.

The recent overhauling of the Lincoln Highway has placed Bedford Springs within easy reach of the automobile from Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia, two hundred miles distant, can be easily made in a day—a fact.

Homes for 104 Children Found By the Georgia Home Society

The semi-annual report just made by the Georgia Children's Home society shows that nearly as many children have been placed in this time as during the entire year of 1914. The financial condition of the society is also shown to be in a flourishing condition.

For the 104 children who have received homes in the six months preceding July 7, there have been a total of 1,975 applications. The largest number of applications from any state was 481 from Georgia. One application for children came from Ohio, and nine were received from Texas. The number of children on hand and yet to be disposed of July 1, was 30.

One death occurred in the period covered by the report out of the total of 124 children taken by the home. Sixty-three children were visited, and 79 homes were inspected. Twelve families were aided by advice or otherwise, in which 19 children were involved.

In the four and a half years the society has been established, 1,975 children have been taken, 178 have been placed, two have been returned to the country, 2,130 have been adopted, and 2,130 have been placed in the country. The society has received a total of $1,735.22 in the six months preceding July 7, 1915. The society has received a total of $1,735.22 in the six months preceding July 7, 1915.

A total of $1,735.22 was received by the society during the six months last past. Of these receipts, $1,414.40 were fees, $1,340 were appropriations and the contributions amounted to $1,579.81.

HUNDREDS OF MULES AWAIT THE ARRIVAL OF TWO INSPECTORS

Atlanta stock men have provided hundreds of mules which will be turned over to British inspectors during the next few days to be shipped to Europe for war purposes.

The first shipment of 100 mules will go forward Monday. They have arranged to handle at least one hundred mules daily for an indefinite period.

A rigid inspection will be made by the foreign representatives, who will require that no mules shall be less than fifteen hands one inch high, with two inches high, with shoes.

The English government will pay $150 per head for each mule, which can pass inspection, which will mean, if their order is filled, $150,000 paid to Atlanta stock men, or nearly half a million dollars each month.

Following the publication in The Constitution last Tuesday of a story of the selection by the allies of Atlanta's stock men, the city has received scores of mule-owners in Georgia and neighboring states to consult with local dealers by wire and telephone, and many came to Atlanta personally to arrange for converting into cash the mules they owned.

It is not to be expected that the mules will be needed this season, since the crops have all been laid by.

A total of $1,735.22 was received by the society during the six months last past. Of these receipts, $1,414.40 were fees, $1,340 were appropriations and the contributions amounted to $1,579.81.

CLAIM OF BARRETT FOR PHAGAN REWARD REFUSED BY COURT

That it is beyond the jurisdiction of the city government to offer rewards in murder cases—this being the ruling of the court in a decision handed down yesterday in the case of Robert Barrett, who claimed the city reward of $1,000 offered for the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Mary Phagan. Judge Ellis held that rewards in murder cases should be offered by the state, and not by the city.

Barrett's plea to the courts to procure the reward, which had been denied him by the claims committee of council on the ground that his testimony was not conclusive, was strongly fought by the city, when his attorney, Lawton Kelley, carried it into the superior court.

AUTO COMPANY WILL INCREASE ITS STOCK

Paige Detroit Motor Company Announces Change From $250,000 to $1,000,000.

Evidence of the prosperity of the automobile industry in general and of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car company in particular is disclosed in the news that the Paige directors have made arrangements for the increase of their capital stock August 2 from $250,000 to $1,000,000. This action was taken at a recent meeting of the directors when the payment of the regular monthly cash dividend of 10 per cent was ordered.

This significant move on the part of the directors, coupled with the fact that an army of workmen are busy night and day constructing a large addition to the plant that will enable the Paige to double its capacity, is calling attention again to the phenomenal achievements of this company. The success of the Paige has been won in four years. Three hundred cars were manufactured its first year. This season, with production confined to sixes, a light five-passenger six and a seven-passenger model, the schedule calls for about 15,000 cars. Such an extraordinary growth in such a brief period is almost unparalleled even in an industry that is filled with sensational achievements.

One of the biggest hits the Paige company made was its production of the Fairfield "Six 46" launched last January. This is the car that gave the company its greatest forward impetus. The 1916 model of the Fairfield has been out just a few weeks and one dealer's orders for the month of July total 175 cars. Much credit for the success of this concern is due to the men directing its policies and activities. The board of directors of the Paige company comprises some of the keenest business men in the middle west, every one of whom is a recognized factor in financial circles, having already won success by good business judgment and ability.

Branch Agency Is Established Here By the Pullman Motor Car Company

NEW PULLMAN CAR.

After fourteen years of successful manufacture and operation in the states of the north, in which it is claimed that the company had all the business it could properly take care of, the Pullman Motor Car Company of York, Pa., has established a large branch agency in this city.

The Atlanta company is known as the Pullman Southern Distributors, and is located at 316 Peachtree, L. L. Stevenson, son of the vice president of the parent company, a young man who has served in both the mechanical and sales end of the big motor company, is the Atlanta sales manager. He arrived in the city about a week ago, driving down from New York in one of his latest Pullman Juniors, making the trip in about a week. Already Mr. Stevenson has made a number of good staunch friends along automobile row, being personally a man of genial and affable manners, and has impressed upon those who have come in contact with him that his wide experience in practically every side of the automobile business must amply equip him for the duties laid out for him in his new connection. The company will cover the states of Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

Will Be of Value.

The father of Mr. Stevenson, Oscar Stevenson, is vice president of the Pullman Motor Car company. He is recognized as one of the leaders in the auto world in the north. He is also the president of the Pullman Southern Distributors, the new Atlanta agency, and will spend about half of his time in this city. The close connection between the big company at York, Pa., and the Atlanta agency is going to prove of great value to patrons of the latter, and will guarantee to them that the excellence of service which can come only through such close connection be-capacity of salesman, will prove a valuable adjunct to the Southern Distributors. Mr. Hull is a Georgian, formerly connected with one of the well-known automobile concerns of this city, and has a host of friends whose congratulations will go out to the new agency on the wisdom of its selection of this popular and experienced salesman.

This is not the first time, however, the Pullman Junior has been represented in this section. About four years ago Captain Heide, for a short time handled this car, and the satisfaction which the cars have given to purchasers made at that time is expected to prove of large benefit to the new distributors. However, after a time, the agency was discontinued, and for the past three or four years the Pullman car has not been represented here.

Made in Two Models.

The Pullman Juniors are made both in touring and roadster models, and as a medium-price car are said to equal many at much higher price. They are thoroughly modern in every respect, and with a price of $775 f. o. b. Atlanta, are expected to be a winner here. "For fourteen years," said Mr. Stevenson, sales manager, "our company has really had its hands full looking after the northern territory. We have sold our cars faster than we could make them. But now, with an enlarged capacity, we have decided to venture into the southern states, where we believe a splendid opportunity awaits us. When I abandoned our agency here a few years ago, business conditions were somewhat unsettled down here, but we believe things are going to be normal soon, and we cannot foresee anything but success for our car."

"Our motor is in one unit and develops 30-horsepower. It has detachable head and side bottom. We use the Splitdorf-Dixie magneto, silent chain drive, is fitted with Stromberg carburetor, with hot air line. In every detail it compares most favorably with the higher-priced cars, being electrically equipped throughout, and at the price it is offered ought to prove a great seller for this section."

$3,000,000 Business Done in Detroit in Year In Automobile Industry

Three hundred million dollars represent the automobile business done in Detroit last year, according to the government industrial census taken here. While official announcement will be made in Washington, $300,000,000 is a conservative figure, according to a United States official in touch with the work.

This amount is for the year ending June 30 and is just five times the industry total for the preceding twelve months and accounts in good part for transforming Detroit from a quiet, stable town with a village-like atmosphere into a bustling city of 250,000 souls which is gradually enjoying the best business conditions of any city in the country today.

Dealers of Country Show Much Interest In Goodrich Service

Dealers all over the country are much interested in the new Goodrich News Service. The big rubber company down at Akron is putting out periodically, while bulletins showing photographs of interesting happenings in the motor world. Such a news service is of exceptional value. There is nothing that sells a story so quickly as a picture, and when a person can get the latest motor news in photographic form by merely stopping and looking a few moments in the window, the chances are he is going to stop.

Prominently displayed, this new service is going to attract attention in the dealer's window and call people into his store who would otherwise not have done so.

Dealers all over the country are looking up with the service, and it promises to grow to very large proportions. The Goodrich company, although put off a brief moment for the service, is not charging the dealers a single penny for it. There are no obligations whatever, all the dealer has to do who wishes to have the bulletins appear in his window, is send his name in to the nearest Goodrich branch or direct to the Goodrich factory at Akron, and it will be promptly placed on the list.

Division Which Wins Big Business Contest Entertains the Goat

Leading the division of the Goodrich, Tire and Rubber company in amount of business for the month, carries with it the honor of entertaining the Goodrich goat. To receive him as a prize is the ambition of each district manager.

The Goodrich goat is neither fiction nor allegorical figure. He is a reality, truly, sure-enough goat, with whiskers, horns, and—yes, fragrance. In token of his chief characteristic, the radiance of sweet-smelling savors, he has been denominated "Goat." Although he is not that kind of a goat, it has been suggested that "Sweet William" would be an appropriate name, as he could be associated with flowers. He is the association.

Upon the goat's initial appearance at one of the Goodrich branches, the "goat" is announced. The other branches that he "had their goat" that it was up to them to take it away from him—he would defend it against all comers. Consequently, when Victor's guardians are no longer about the sales list, he rebuffs upon a voyage to some distant haven, and is there received with open arms and closed doors.

CHANDLER SIX $1295

A Plain Talk About Automobile Values

PEOPLE are asking their friends a lot of questions about the relative values of the best known automobiles.

Interest centers chiefly, of course, in the light-weight sixes, because the light-weight six is the most popular type of car, and much of the interest centers in the Chandler.

The Chandler cannot supply the entire demand for light-weight sixes, but for thorough, careful purchasers who want to be very sure of relative values, there are some interesting facts well worth considering.

Such a purchaser will not forget that the Chandler was the first high-grade six selling for less than $2000 and weighing less than 3000 pounds. He will not forget that the Chandler pioneered the way for light-six domination and established the Light-Six Era. That was three years ago. The price was $1785.

The popularity of the Chandler Idea has grown by leaps and bounds ever since.

Other light-sixes quickly followed into the market but the Chandler has occupied a position of leadership all the way. A leadership in quality and price. And now Chandler is building Ten Thousand cars a year still unable to fill the Chandler demand.

A vital element in the history of Chandler success—and the secret of Chandler high quality and low price this year—is the fact that essentially the Chandler car of this season is the Chandler car of the first season.

There has never been any reason for bringing out a radically new model. The original Chandler, in all its principles of design and construction, was final.

From season to season we have refined it and beautified it and added the newest standard features of equipment. And this season we have brought out the really wonderful new seven-passenger body. But, from the mechanical standpoint, the car is practically unchanged. That marvelous Chandler motor—the foundation of Chandler supremacy—has remained untouched.

Standing pat on a model that was, and is, right, we have avoided costly experimentation that must attend the production of new models. We have lowered our overhead to a minimum. We have been enabled to make sensational price reductions from season to season and still give better value.

The world's greatest manufacturer of low-priced cars has built his tremendous success on this policy, and the public knows—you know—it is the policy that gives the purchaser "most for his money."

That is why no other car of like size and character has caught up with the Chandler price.

From $1785 this price last year went down to $1595. And this year down to $1295. In practical effect, Chandler offers you a $1785 car for $1295. And we ask you to try to match its value in any other car.

Look them over, all well-known makes. Study them carefully. Compare them part by part with the Chandler. Compare them with the Chandler for comfort and power and snap and finish and style. Then you will realize how much it means to you as a purchaser that the Chandler was right in the first place and that the Chandler manufacturing policy has been a policy of devotion to this one model.

About Anti-Skids

How They Differ. We Spend $1,000,000 This Year to Make Goodyear All-Weather Treads Double Thick

Some anti-skids are simply regular treads made rough. The Goodyear All-Weather is an extra tread vulcanized on to the regular. It will cost us this year about $1,000,000 to give this double thickness on our output of All-Weathers.

This means more than extra wear. It means deep grips which remain efficient after thousands of miles of service.

Serious Defects

Some anti-skids have shallow, short-lived projections. Some have rounded edges which fail to grip. Some center the strains at small points in the fabric. Some cause much vibration.

The Goodyear All-Weather has sharp-edged grips. It is flat and regular, so it runs like a plain tread. It distributes the strains.

Any man who measures and compares anti-skids is bound to choose Goodyear All-Weathers.

So All Through

Every detail of Goodyear Fortified Tires shows advantages like this. The extras we give you outside of the tread will cost us this year $1,635,000. This year's improvements over last year will alone cost us $500,000. All that for features exclusive to Goodyears, or which few others use.

Yet this year's price reduction will save our users about $5,000,000. And that was our third reduction in two years, totaling 45 per cent.

Impossible Claims

Tires which lack these extras claim to equal Goodyears. That is, of course, ridiculous.

Tires with small output claim to match Goodyear values. That is impossible.

Accept the users' verdict. Goodyears lead in sales and prestige after millions have been tested. They have held top place for years. And our increase this year in new users is breaking every Goodyear record.

Your friends or we will sometime win you to Goodyear tires. You can't always resist these advantages. They mean too much to you. Any dealer will supply you.

The Truth about the Underworld - BY ONE WHO HAS LEFT IT

How a Trained Crook Planned His Work and Methods Police Pursued to Persuade Public That Criminals Are Always Apprehended

By J. A. PETERS.

ONE afternoon last week on M— street I met J., an ex-convict who is out on parole. I asked him how things were with him. "Things are rotten," he replied. "I am trying to make good my parole and keep out of trouble, but it is tough going. The best work I can get is a dinner waiter's job, where I make a dollar a day, six days a week," he said.

"Well," I advised, "stick at it, keep away from the underworld and you will win out."

"You can bet I'll keep out of the underworld. I am only getting $6 a week now, but it's all mine. None of it buys wine for thirty saloon-keepers. None goes to a bum politician. None of it helps pay for some crooked lawyer's automobile and no more of my money will be slipped into the fist of a guardian of the peace. No—I've done that for years and I'm tired taking chances for them all."

Crime as Business Calling.

From this it would seem that the underworld is not wholly composed of outlawed members of society.

This man was sent to prison for picking pockets. He was a "dip," or as they are now generally called, a "cannon." With him reform is a business proposition involving absolutely no remorse for having committed crime. He has served three prison terms of one year each, and the last one of these was the result of pleading guilty to a larceny charge of which he was entirely innocent.

A street car passenger was robbed, reported the theft to the police and gave a description of a man he had seen standing near him on the car before he discovered his loss. J. was arrested on suspicion, "stood up" for identification, and on the complainant picking him out he was booked and indicted. Because of his previous record J. was certain he would be convicted. He had no "fall money" for bail or defense, so to save time he pleaded guilty.

Will Not Fight False Charge.

Like cases are common, and I know several men now serving time for crimes with which they have no other connection than bearing a likeness to the general description of the real or fancied culprit given by the complaining witness, plus a criminal record.

The two principal reasons for this condition are that for minor offenses, such as pocket picking, shoplifting, etc., where the penalties are comparatively short, termed, the accused knows that in a trial, had character testimony will overbalance any evidence in his favor unless an unimpeachable alibi is furnished for him and because of the unreliability of identifications.

A few years ago I was told that a salesman in a certain retail store situated on a busy street in the loop was wearing a valuable solitaire diamond ring and that he wanted to sell it. My informant was X., a trusted "under" (one who locates valuable or money on a commission basis for holdup men or burglars). I instructed X.

to ascertain the name of a well-to-do customer of that store. He found that a Mr. Q. answered my purpose.

One bright, sunny morning I took Tom, a fellow worker, with me, after explaining to him my plan for getting the diamond, and posted him on the curbstone facing the one entrance to the store. Tom was to wait there and as soon as he saw me come out prepare to enter the store and in an apparently accidental manner delay any pursuit by bumping into the hatless salesman who probably would come after me on the run.

These preparations completed, I entered the store and, while making a trifling purchase, asked the salesman, who was alone at that hour, if Mr. Q. had been in yet. He replied that Mr. Q. seldom came there in the forenoon. "Well, he ought to be here very soon," I said. "He made an appointment to meet me here at 11 this morning. So I'll wait, if you don't mind."

Thief Plays Role Well.

Wait I did, walking up and down in front of the showcases, talking to the clerk of the fitness of the weather, of the busy crowds that continually passed the door. I was wearing a brand new suit of a rather unusual shade of light brown with a greenish sheen to it, and he remarked it, asking if that were not the new fashionable color men were affecting that summer.

After fifteen minutes, appearing to grow impatient, I asked the clerk if he knew Mr. Q. well. "You see," said I, "I am a counter man in a pawnshop. Mr. Q. comes in our place occasionally and, unknown to my boss, I do a bit of business, buying gems on my own hook. Mr. Q. says he has a bargain for me, some diamonds belonging to a lady he knows, and will meet me here this morning to show me them for appraisal. I wish he would hurry," I added.

"Is that so?" said my victim, slipping the diamond ring off his finger and offering it across the counter for my inspection. "What do you think I paid for this four-carat stone?" In silence, with no undue haste, I took the ring, looked at it casually at first, and then in pantomime I indicated that the light indoors was poor as I walked from the counter toward the door.

Crook Summons Police.

At the door I stepped out, turned quickly and was soon making my way among the crowd with moderate speed. My confederate on the sidewalk started for the entrance as I came out, but he had nothing to do, for it was a full minute before the clerk inside had any suspicion of wrong. My friend Tom obliged him by calling a policeman before starting to rejoin me and in a half hour the detectives were there

A street car passenger was robbed. The police were given a description. J. was arrested on suspicion, "stood up" for identification and picked out. He had no "fall money," pleaded guilty, and was sent to prison.

Can Society Reclaim Crooks?

THE author of the article on this page was not a criminal of the "doormat" class. He was a thief who went after big game, game that required sagacity and brains to trap. Others might steal clothes from the line of the busy housewife or doormats from the doors of the sleeping, but this man took pride in the fact that no guard of society was impregnable to his attack.

J. A. Peters, as he is known, feared no man. But he came to learn that he could not risk death until sustained by alcohol. He came to learn that the police were ready to meet him at his own game of deceit. He came to learn what it meant to be sent away to do "a stretch" behind the prison bars of the famous Sing Sing prison.

He is now an honest citizen. He is honest, not because society came to him and pleaded that it feared him, but because society said, "Play with fire and we will show you fire burns; play the 'square game' and we will show you it pays to be honest."

Mr. Peters is now in a "square game." He believes alcohol is responsible for the majority of crimes. He knows he is getting more out of life today than he ever hoped was possible, and he is unafraid to tell of his own life if, in some small way, he can influence the young men of today to beware the "easy money."

getting his description of me and a recital of the affair.

As the detectives left him they told him not to worry, that the thief would soon be caught and his diamond restored to him. Late that same day a man was arrested on suspicion and our salesman picked him out of a line of several men at a "stand up" in the police station as the man who had stolen his property that morning.

Beyond the fact that in general build the suspect resembled me there was absolutely no similarity between him and myself—one was of light complexion, the other dark. It does not necessarily follow that the complainant was stupid or dull witted—quite the contrary could be the case and still without evil intent might he identify the wrong man, totally unlike the right one. It is the business of the police to get convictions and they become adept in influencing identifications. Like most people in Christendom who earn their own sup-often violate every moral consideration that governs their private lives.

By subtle suggestion and convincing assurance the detective prepares the mind of the complainant to accept a suspect as the true culprit and swear to his identity.

Making Identification Sure.

The most popular and generally effective method is to say to the victim of a robbery in a tone conveying mutual congratulation: "We have the man. He is an old-timer at this line of graft. Here is his picture, taken some years ago," the while affording a short glimpse of a police department photo of more or less recent date. From that moment the complainant's mind is kept occupied by rapid-fire talk interspersed with studied references to the suspect and his characteristics until by the time he confronts a line of men in which the arrested one is standing (trying hard to look innocent and by the same token achieving the reverse) he has forgotten his original memory of the appearance of the man who robbed him and picks out the man the officers have intended him to identify. Once committing himself in such a choice, he will invariably swear on a stack of Bibles to the infallibility of the selection.

How Police "Shake Down."

In the affair of the diamond above mentioned, the accused was two months in jail awaiting trial and finally discharged for lack of evidence.

The following procedure is one of the many ways dishonest detectives "shake down" ex-convicts or known criminals with impunity. Bill Sherlock, a crooked sleuth, learns from a stool-pigeon that Jerry Strongarm is down at Luke's place, a saloon run by a political power, with a roll of bills in his possession. Sherlock goes and gets Jerry, and the following dialogue ensues: "Hello, Jerry. How's tricks?" "No good, Bill, but I can buy you a drink." "I'm sorry, Jerry, but I cannot stop for sociabilities. I have to take you down to the front office. There's a rap out for you for something that came off the other day."

Jerry's heart drops to his boots, but his hand slips to his pocket and fingers the bills there. Victims of the "stand-up"—possible mistaken identification—loom large to Jerry. Before Bill Sherlock gives Jerry a parting injunction, "Now keep under cover for awhile and don't let on I saw you," money changes hands.

At 3 o'clock on the morning of Nov. 15, 1908, burglars entered the home of James Prunty at Racine avenue and West Thirtieth street. His daughter, awakened by the intruders, screamed and was shot. James Prunty was killed by a bullet and his son died in a few days from injuries sustained in fighting the burglar, who escaped.

A couple of hours later three men, McNally, Warren and Kurth, were arrested on a public street and charged with the murder. The principal witnesses against these men were the widow and daughter of Prunty. Both of these ladies identified the men at the trial as the murderers who invaded their home, although the only light in the house at the time was a small lamp in the kitchen. But it was upon this identification that they were convicted and sentenced to Joliet for life. Warren died, protesting his innocence to his last breath.

The first men to be released under the new law which allows the paroling of prisoners under life sentences were McNally and Kurth, after having been imprisoned over twenty-one years. They have recently been granted a conditional freedom under parole.

The trial judge was H. V. Freeman, and he has since declared that in his opinion these men were victims of mistaken identity and a police "frame-up."

Travesties of Justice.

The value of identification as legal evidence is well known to be unreliable by the legal profession, the bench and more importantly by the underworld—but in spite of this knowledge no comprehensive or effective attempt is made to remove this menace to the fair administration of the law. For this reason, among others, so many trials for minor and major offenses develop into travesties of justice that courts are now seldom referred to as courts of justice but rather as courts of law.

Charlie Blank, now doing his second "bit," says: "What chance have I got? When I finished my first stretch I got a job to help support Molly and my two kids. And I kept away from the mob. One night I came home from work, I met Red on a car and we were both pinched and stood up for a job I had nothing to do with. I was picked out and handed a year. Molly don't know what to believe about it. She went to see the 'mark' who identified me and he said he would not swear a man's liberty away unless he was positive he was the right party. I could not prove where I was on a certain evening at 8 o'clock because I don't remember that night at all. Being picked out and my record settled my hash. Can you beat it?"

Dealers Fear Tobacco Famine

A SHORTAGE and an advance in the price of Turkish tobacco are predicted by James M. Dixon of the Tobacco Products Corporation, who has just returned from a tour of Asia Minor, Turkey and Greece.

"The available supply from the crop of 1914, now being dealt in," said Mr. Dixon, "is only half what it usually is, and of the high-grade tobacco, such as is used in America, there is only 40 per cent of the normal. The crop of 1915 is small in acreage, having been curtailed on account of the planting of grain, and cannot receive proper attention, so that there is no relief in sight. Furthermore, Egypt is entirely cut off from its ordinary source of supply, the Black Sea and Asia Minor, and has been compelled to buy in Greece and Macedonia this year, thus increasing competition."

"Owing to the war it is difficult to make shipments even when purchases are made. Unless the war ends soon or unless the Dardanelles are taken by the allies the situation in the tobacco leaf market will be extremely interesting before long. Turkish tobacco, so called, is that raised in Macedonia and adjacent places, most of which are now parts of Greece. Tobacco used in connection with Macedonian Greek are raised on the southern shore of the Black Sea in Asia Minor from Samsum east, and on the north shore of that sea, in Russia, from Sebastopol east. Egypt gets three-fourths of its supply normally from the Black Sea, and owing to the war not a pound can be had from that section, although the 1914 crop was ample."

Jerry's hand slips in his pocket and fingers the bills there.

The intruders, screamed and was shot. James Prunty was killed by a bullet and his son died in a few days from injuries sustained in fighting the burglar, who escaped.

NEW SYSTEM DEvised FOR THE CARE OF THE MANY THOUSANDS OF ORPHANS THROUGHOUT UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN

Department of Child Helping of the Russell Sage Foundation, After Exhaustive Examination, Announces Reasons Why Orphanages of the Old Fashioned Type Should Be Closed.

SHALL Lovey Mary live with hundreds of her kind, a carefully graded nonentity, or shall she, as Orphan Annie did, "come to our home to stay?"

You remember Lovey Mary of Mrs. Rice's novel, her of the clean gingham dress, with white china buttons down the back and the round straw hat bought at wholesale?

Of course, there comes to mind at once that vision of the child whose imagination travelled to the land away.

Twins far from an orphanage.

of the goblins, which might get us all if we did not watch out. How is it that James Whitcomb Riley has described her new life? The verse runs this way—

"Little Orphan Annie's come to our house to stay, An' wash the cups and saucers, an' brush the crumbs away.

An' sho' the chickens off the porch, and dust the hearth, an' sweep, An' make the fire, an' bake the bread, an' earn her board and keep."

And speaking of orphans we have known, there comes the vision of one, a waif sent from New York City by the Children's Aid Society many years ago, once a ragged boy of the Bowery, who became the Governor of Alaska.

Two systems of caring for the orphan child have long been in vogue in the United States. One is that of the prim and orderly institution; the other, the so-called placing out method. They have been rivals, more or less, but now the fence between them is strongly defined, for there are many delvers into social lore who say that something is going to get the orphan asylum if it does not watch out.

Between the two is the orphan asylum of the new spirit, destined to survive in all elements which make for the preparation for real life and the building up of self-reliance and courage in those that come under its roof.

All over the country orphan asylums of the old type are being closed. Massachusetts has emptied the wards of eighteen of them in the last ten years; Indiana since 1883 has abandoned twenty county orphans' homes and is preparing to get rid of more; Missouri is disposing of many old institutions; in the State of New York the battle between the two systems has just begun. In this latter commonwealth the passing of the so-called Widows' Pension act will probably result in preventing any further expansion of existing institutions and will greatly lessen the number of inmates in them, for it provides means by which poor mothers may be aided in keeping their children at their own hearths. Several of the oldest orphan asylums are nearing it and are preparing to go out of business.

One of the chief factors in the new policy in the United States with regard to the orphan asylum is the Department of Child Helping of the Russell Sage Foundation, which has made an exhaustive examination of this whole question and has given advice which has ended some asylums and prevented the building of others.

The case for the orphan asylum of the old school and the brief against it were both ably presented not long ago by the director of the department, Dr. Hastings H. Hart.

"The application of the spiritual principle," said he, "has produced remarkable results for dependent children. For generations the orphan asylum plan of dealing with the dependent child was the prevailing method in the United States. When a child was left homeless by the death or default of his natural protectors it was thought that a substitute should be provided for the natural home, and the idea prevailed that the substitute could be made better than the original article. Thus grew up the orphan asylum system of bringing up homeless children in institutions from infancy to young manhood and womanhood."

"A good argument can be made in favor of the orphan asylum system. It is said that in the ordinary home of poverty it is impossible for the child to have a fair chance. The home is unsanitary; the food is insufficient; the parents are incompetent and in many cases vicious and cruel."

"In a well managed institution there can be maintained perfect sanitary conditions, good ventilation, suitable food, sufficient clothing and wholesome in-

DORA.

Dora was a black eyed, high spirited, active little girl of eight years, who, with her eight brothers and sisters, had to be taken away from her home because of bad conditions there. All the children came under the supervision of the State Charities Aid Association and were placed in family homes. Dora went to live with Mr. and Mrs. D., whose home had been thoroughly investigated. Mr. D. was an engineer. He and his wife were very fond of children and anxious to take a child. They owned their own home of seven well furnished rooms, had money in the bank and were thoroughly respected in the community. In this home Dora developed into a bright, attractive, active child. Her high spirit would undoubtedly either have been crushed in an institution or if this spirit had developed without direction or control Dora would have had many difficulties.

children are trained for adoption or relegating them to the limbo of things that were.

It is this idea which has resulted in the mothers' pensions acts being passed in various States, based on a principle which commands the assent of all who are champions of childhood. The placing out of children as a result of this new spirit is, therefore, now being carried out on a more extensive scale than ever before. The Children's Aid Society of New York City and similar organizations in the large cities of the United States have done much. This society spends a half million dollars a year for that purpose; Philadelphia gives $200,000, and in Illinois, where the work of placing out is in its infancy, $100,000 is so expended.

First of all, this bureau investigates thoroughly and with deliberation the homes where it is considering sending the dependent children under its care. It considers the position of the family in the community, the number of persons in it, their age, occupation, character. It examines into the matter of income. The agent ascertains if the proposed foster parents are really fond of children, if they are self-controlled, reliable, efficient. Far in advance of anything else the agents seek homes where may be found good food, well ventilated and clean rooms and the best influences. To realize such conditions and at the same time to keep away from the cut and dried discipline and the all too orderly ways of the asylum is no easy task, and yet, results show, it has been accomplished. The child has at the start of its new life the essential things required for a decent home, for it would be impossible for any to respond to an environment which did not give at least a fair chance in life.

When this is done comes the supervision of the children in the new homes. The agent visits the child at intervals, not at regular but preferably at irregular ones. The representative of the society is likely to drop in suddenly and find the child at play or in school. It is one of the rules for inspection that the boy or girl must be asked about how it is getting along in the new home at some time when the agent and protégé are by themselves. This is done tactfully. Some well defined excuse is always made for such a conference, such as a walk or a ride. The progress of the child is carefully watched both at school and in the church and in all its relations to society. If it be found that there are temperamental reasons why the youngsters cannot get along in the new environment a change is made. If medical attention is required the society arranges for it, especially in communities where expert medical or surgical aid may not be readily available.

The transplantation of the ward to his new home is only successful when both it and the family are happy. This supervision is kept up until the child is eighteen years of age or is legally adopted.

The records of the bureau are filled with cases which attest the success of this home placing method, and many children have grown up in the communities to which they have been sent and have become a credit to society in every way.

The wards of the bureau can only be mentioned by their first names. There is David, for instance, who three years ago was one of a hundred boys in an orphan asylum. He is now studying in one of the best high schools in New York city and is preparing to become a physician. His original home was broken up because his mother became insane and his father was shiftless and indifferent. There is Richard, a hale young farmer up the State, now self-supporting, who not long ago was a puny orphan asylum child.

Among the cases is that of Dora, a high spirited, active child, who may not be readily available, was taken from her parents because the conditions were intolerably bad. She was one of those whose impetuous nature and original ideas might have been crushed in a typical orphan asylum. Her new home was with Mr. and Mrs. D., who own their own house, have money in the bank and are highly respected in the community. Dora is the light of that abode.

And there is Elizabeth, once a timorous child of an old line asylum, and now filled with the joy of living. And one of the exhibits of the bureau are two photographs, one representing Alice in the prosaic garb of the institution, the other a child living the free life of the country among the trees and flowers. In a farm home not far from New York city are twins romping in the daisies of the field, who not long since were neglected and forlorn in an east side tenement, from which they were temporarily taken to an asylum before adoption.

It is work like this which makes the task of helping the poor and needy child, cluster all about, to paraphrase the words of the Howells poet, a labor not only of love but of sane and well ordered efficiency.

A Blind Man Lover of Birds

ALTHOUGH living in a world of darkness, Mr. John T. Timmons, of Cadiz, Ohio, spends his days in varied activities. Moreover, an ardent lover of nature, he enjoys the melodies of birds and the fragrance of flowers with peculiar intensity.

His snug little home is called Bird Lawn, and under the drooping elms at the rear the blind man sits for hours or walks about the adjoining fields listening to the songs of the birds that he has labored so long to attract to his place. So many are there that he says often there are not ten seconds in an hour when he does not hear the notes of a bird. Certainly the little feathered creatures would be ungrateful if they did not pour out their best songs for the benefit of their friend, who can never see them, but who constantly listens for their tuneful lays. With no help from any one, and with rather crude tools, Mr. Timmons has built houses of varying sizes and sites for the accommodation of the purple martin, bluebird, wren and other insect destroying birds, and in the season they are densely populated.

In addition to the bird houses about his place Mr. Timmons has constructed a curious device which he calls his air motor. It has almost a hundred wind wheels of differing sizes and shapes, which go with terrific speed in an ordinary breeze or gale. From whichever direction the wind comes the wheels are in motion. Mr. Timmons says that he has been told that he had wheels in his head, so he removed them and set them up where he could hear them, if he could not see them.

"I build the bird houses for the same reason," he explained. "I love to hear their happy songs, and I am the happier for doing something to take care of the neglected little feathered things. I can get more pleasure out of an hour spent in the field or thicket than others can find in an evening at the theatre or a moving picture show."

Next to birds Mr. Timmons is most deeply interested in flowers. Without plans he constructed a conservatory in which he and his wife spend much of their time working among the flowers. Through his delicate sense of touch Mr. Timmons can distinguish the different plants and flowers, and he is so well informed about them that he is regarded as an authority on flower culture and writes on the subject for a number of periodicals.

Mr. Timmons uses a typewriter, and his wife, who reads and corrects his manuscripts, says that he makes very few mistakes. Asked how he could describe so accurately in his writings things he had never seen, Mr. Timmons replied:—

"Sight is not the only means of conveying correct impressions to the brain. I can see some things more perfectly through other senses than I could distinguish if I had eyesight. I see through my fingers, my ears, my sense of taste and smell and in many other ways that I cannot explain. My imagination is not so fickle as might be guessed."

"I can look into darkness and behold objects and results as true as those you see near you. 'I cannot see a star, yet I know they are there, millions of miles out in space, and I can see their purpose and usefulness in the great scheme of the Almighty.'" finances. If necessary, the child's food can be prescribed by a physician and weighed out for him at each meal. He is constantly under the influence of selected caretakers. He never plays truant; he never misses the evening study hour; he never runs with the gang. His religious, moral, intellectual and vocational instruction can be gauged to his needs with precision. In these circumstances it is asked, "How can a good institution fail to produce a better output than the home of ignorance, vice or intemperance?"

"The answer is, 'Institutionalism.' Institution life is contrary to child nature. It is artificial and unnatural. The cooking is done by steam; the washing is done by steam; the house is heated by steam; the bell rings for the child to get up in the morning, for him to say his prayers, for him to go to meals and back from meals, to go to church and back from school—all day long to the bell!"

"What does that mean? It means that some one else is planning his life for him—that some one else is doing his thinking for him. The graduate of the orphan asylum lacks initiative. He does not know how to spend or to save his money. He has no knowledge of human life or human nature, and when the time comes, as it must come, for him to take his place in society he is at a disadvantage."

"The best orphan asylums have long recognized this evil and have sought to overcome it. Such institutions as the Chicago Orphan Asylum, the Rose Orphan Asylum, at Terre Haute, Ind.; the Protestant Orphan Asylum, at Cleveland; the Rochester Orphan Asylum, the New York Orphanage, at Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., and the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society, at Passaicville, N. Y., are seeking to adapt their work to the personal needs and development of their pupils. They reproduce as far as possible the conditions of family life. They teach the children the use of money. They keep them in touch with their friends out in the world. They give them vocational training in the school of letters and a vocational school, and they watch over their children with fostering care after they leave the institution."

"While there are still many orphanages of the old fashioned type where the lives of the children are artificial, unnatural and sometimes unhappy, there are many orphanages of an entirely new spirit, like the Cleveland Orphan Asylum, whose superintendent, himself an orphan boy, has a keen realization of the feelings and the needs of his children, or like the New York Orphanage, whose superintendent, an eminent educator, creates for his children an atmosphere of love and joyous living. He weaves the whole life of the child into his education and makes school life a daily festival. He pays his children wages, teaches them to spend, to give and to save and finds ways by which their lives may expand according to their natural endowments. His whole life is an expression of the fatherhood of which his wards have, unfortunately, been deprived. We have orphanages, like the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Asylum, where the children are divided into families, each family in its own cottage, with its kitchen, living room and a group of other people. In this asylum the neglected children from the Ghetto of New York, coming from homes of wretchedness, have developed the spirit of hope and courage and aspiration. These children, who would never have entered the doors of the High School, pass the examinations of the State Board of Regents and graduate from the High School in nine years from their entrance into the primary school, receiving at the same time a more thorough vocational education than is given in any other school with which I am acquainted."

"These orphanages and others of similar spirit are slowly revolutionizing the institutional work of the United States. Unfortunately, institutions of this type are as yet few in number, and in many orphan asylums we find children with shaven heads and uniform clothing marching listlessly in long lines, eating an endless repetition of a prescribed dietary, served in thick dishes with iron cups and repulsive oilcloth table covers and uncomfortable benches. In such institutions life is barren, inhuman and abnormal. It is not surprising to learn that many of their graduates fail to succeed."

It is this new spirit which is playing havoc with the antiquated methods of the old line asylums and is either making of them receiving stations in which

Now, in conclusion, let me say that you have seen the possibilities of south Georgia. No one with a vision of the possibilities that live at the present can foretell the development coming of this section of the south. The possibilities of the coast rise in the mountains. In the mountains the possibilities are hidden below the hills, but if this

THE ALPHA PROGRAM AN INTERESTING ONE

Billy Beard Will Continue to Entertain With New Songs and Jokes.

The bill at the Alpha this week is replete with many splendid attractions. For Monday, the fifth episode of "The Broken Coin," a Broadway hit, will be the main feature, augmented by an interesting drama.

For Tuesday, Manager Fowler has secured Bruno Lassing's story of the East Side, "A Hunchback's Romance," adapted from "An Interruption," the story that ran in the Commonwealth several months ago. It takes the spectator beyond the pale of settlement in Russia, and deep into the life of the little known denizens of the East Side, with a sympathetic understanding and appeal to all. Bruno Lassing is ranked among the foremost delineators of these quaint characters and like Montague Glass, his stories are being dramatized into films that appeal with their messages of truth.

In addition to this drama, full of heart interest, a screamingly funny comedy, "The Party From The South," will be shown, featuring Lee Moran and Billy Rhodes. The laugh producer is of the famed Nestor brand, and patrons know what to expect.

The ninth story of the Pathé-Balboa, "Who Pays?" series, for the Commonwealth, will be the feature Wednesday. These pictures are shown exclusively at the Alpha, and deserve the praise of Atlanta for selecting a series of pictures that are instructive as well as entertaining. These photo-films have been selected by the leading educators of the country.

The drama, "For the Common Wealth," the story mixes with political and gambling den, and the young woman of the picture is seen to play a double role, being treated to bitterly regret it, and to look on the sorrow and misunderstanding caused by her deed, unable to rectify the mistake without untold sacrifice.

This drama teaches a moral that hits at political machinations of a municipality. The corruptions of city officials are laid bare, and men supposedly invested with honor, allow the continuance of gambling dens and places of demoralization in order to add more money to their own well-filled coffers.

Billy Bead will continue to entertain with new songs and stories from his collection of which there seems to be no limit. Gentle Billy is a very popular man in Atlanta, and nightly finds a big crowd awaiting him when he steps before the curtain.

"Via Wireless."

George Fitzmaurice is to produce the well-known Broadway success, "Via Wireless" for Pathé-Balboa. This picture is some cast, and is being made by a good Gail Kane, who would be a very beautiful woman on the stage. She will be the leading woman, and will be remembered as starring in "The Broken Coin" and "The Underground Foe," two well-known theatrical successes. Bruce McVittie will be the leading man. Paul McAllister will have the character part. Fitzmaurice started work on his picture June 25.

BESSIE BARRISCALE IN "THE LAST ACT"

The exterior of a typical New York theatrical boarding house is one of the interesting sets that is being erected this week at Inevitable. It is for use in "The Last Act," the big play in which Beattie Barriscale is working under the direction of Walter Edwards. Los Angeles is a large and beautiful and accommodating city, but there is one thing that Los Angeles does not possess. That is a dwelling that resembles those in old Manhattan, the compact, brownstone houses with an entrance through the basement. Therefore, carpenters, stonecutters and cement workers are busy building one. The house will have all the exterior appointments of the real thing, and will have an interior as well, so that the boarders may be photographed from what will purport to be the street.

Lady Raffles and Detective Duck vie in popularity with the Black Box criminologists if one is to judge by the number of people who are flocking to see the new picture.

"Leah, the Forsaken," with Vivian Prescott and William Shay, will be released by special request on the Universal program.

"SCARLET SIN" TUESDAY AT SAVOY THEATRE

Hobart Bosworth Will Play Lead in Universal's Broadway Star Feature.

"The Underground Foe" is the title of the fifth episode of "The Broken Coin," booked at the Savoy Monday. This serial is the biggest success that the Universal company has scored in the way of serials. The plot is such a splendid one, and coupled with the fact that Grace Cunard and Francis Ford take the leading roles, each installment is awaited with the utmost impatience. In addition to the well-laid plot, superb photography and inevitable portrayals by the other members of the cast, the popularity of "The Underground Foe" is made manifest by the fact that it has been booked at the Savoy Monday. Mr. Ford and Miss Cunard spent a week in the desert at Oxnard, where Miss Cunard suffered intensely from sunburn. For eighteen hours at a stretch the company was without water, and during Mr. Ford's absence Miss Cunard took entire charge of the company and completed several hundred feet of negative. So this episode can virtually be said to have been directed by Miss Cunard.

Eddie Polak works as the fearless Raffles detective special mention. His Herculean strength is made manifest in the numerous escapades in which he is seen and which allows him to evade tendencies full away. He is loathe to the front as the only actor who sells most vital actors.

When just such stars that create an impression of forcefulness constitute the cast there is never a lagging moment, and the enthusiasm with which "The Broken Coin" has been greeted fully attests to the popularity of the serial.

Bosworth's booking will be the first real dramatic masterpiece, "The Scarlet Sin," a spiritual story of the human emotions and passions that will create a sensation wherever shown.

Hobart Bosworth, who takes the role of the minister, collaborated with Otto Turner in the production of this thrilling Broadway Universal feature. "The Scarlet Sin" is without doubt one of the greatest comedies ever shown. It is a masterpiece. Bosworth's brilliant histrionic ability as an actor, his marvelous success as a producer of startling feature films has placed him among the most brilliant stars of the film firmament.

ALAMO NO. 2 Big Features Scheduled for All This Week.

The Alamo No. 2 has an unusually strong bill this week. Beginning Monday with Alice Hollister and Hal Ford in the three-reel Broadway release, "The Maker of Dreams," and continuing all through the week with other splendid features, and reaching a climax Friday with Edmund Bruce in the five-reel drama, "The Shooting of Dan McGraw." The "Shooting of Dan McGraw," scheduled for Monday, Alice Hollister has the titular role and she does some fine work that is as full of grace as a dream. The scenes, in a beautiful mood, have been caught by the camera and put on the screen with nothing less than magic. The locations are in Florida woods, and the sandy scenes have many little things that strike one most pleasantly—bits of acting now and now the general grace of the whole production, and has in the character of "Rags" one that is eminently adapted to the theatre.

On Tuesday and Thursday will be presented a comedy by Charles Hoyt, entitled "A Texas Steer." A five-act Selig Red Seal release, in which the principal character is portrayed by the eminent actor, Tyrone Power, with an all-star supporting cast.

HANK AND HIS ANIMAL FRIENDS By Walt McDougall

WALL STREET DOMINATED BY WAR-SHARE TRADING

Good Crop Prospects and Improved Business Conditions Aids Railroad Shares.

New York, July 31.—Speculation in war stocks ran rampant this week. The rise of these shares together with many unconfirmed reports of huge profits buying and quotations were marked up to unparalleled figures. Trading was the saviest of months, with transactions well over 1,000,000 shares on two days. This business was concentrated largely in the war shares, although elsewhere there were large dealings.

Of the war stocks Bethlehem steel and crucible steel remained in the lead. The extent of their erratic fluctuations indicates the character of the market. Bethlehem sold low as 207 and as high as 275. Crucible steel's range was from 41½ to 52.

Toward the end of the week there was evidence of an abatement of speculative excesses. The rise had been called to a point which caused the calling of margin.

was apparent, moreover, that no satisfactory basis existed for advances of such a character. The violent slump occasioned by news of the torpedoing of the German liner Liesanaw, although quickly overcome, was a warning of what might occur. The movement became more cautious, with some sharp recessions and trading diminished although the greater part of the more conspicuous advances was retained.

Railroad stocks remained comparatively quiet, but were firmer than in the case last week. Rumors of dividend reductions were borne out in the case of the Pau, which cut its dividend from a  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{1}{4}$  cent.

Road stocks in general benefited however, from good crop prospects and improvement of business conditions in some industries.

The change for the better in the steel and related industries was reflected most forcibly in the quarterly statement of the United States Steel corporation, which fully met optimistic forecasts. Other companies reported increased activity.

Interesting Program
Arranged by Masons
For Decatur Meeting

The most interesting program ever arranged for any meeting of its kind will be carried out by the fifth district Masonic convention when it meets at Decatur on August 11. The visit of Grand Master N. H. Ballard, of the grand lodge of Georgia, and his public address on the campus of Agnes Scott college will draw a record crowd.

The exemplifying of the degrees has been assigned to three of the best known lodges in the district, W. L. Luckie lodge, of West End, will confer the Entered Apprentices; Colquhoun lodge will give the Fellowcraft degree while Gate City lodge, No. 2, of Atlanta will confer the Master Mason degree. The famous third section lodge of Gate City lodge will take part.

Pythagoras lodge of Decatur, which will be host for the convention, has arranged an interesting social program, including a musical program with Mrs. George M. Mable as soloist and Miss Cliff Mable, pianist.

A big barbecue will be served. Master Masons at noon and supper will be spread in the afternoon.

The convention will open at 8 o'clock and the Entered Apprentice degree will follow. Musical numbers will be given and Grand Master Hallowell

Body of Cason Recovered.
Columbia, S. C., July 31.—The body of J. Calhoun Cason, drowned yesterday in the Savannah river near Abbeville, has been recovered. The body was found when he attempted to save Will M. Colvey, a companion, who drowned last night. Cason was recovered early today after an all night search. McColvey's body was recovered last night. Cason was employed by the government at Abbeville and McColvey was a private.

SAY NATURAL GAS AND REFINED OIL
PUBLIC UTILITIES

Kansas City, Kan., July 31.—Shale natural gas and petroleum products be declared utilities, their prices fixed by the utility commissions of the states in which the articles are sold. It is beginning to look as though Kansas, which has furnished much of the constructive economic thought that has resulted in great good in the past few years. He has been a pioneer in the oil field, having devised a method of regulation for natural gas and refined oil which will curb monopoly and protect the people from extortion.

The Uncle Sam Oil Company, the pioneer "independent" oil producer, oil transporter, oil refiner and oil distributor, has headquarters in this city, now engaged upon an interesting project, the success of which will have revolutionary effect upon the oil and gas affairs of three great middle western states. It is conducting before the secretary of the interior and congress immense lease of 436,000 acres of oil and gas lands in the Osage Nation, which it has already proved in the United States federal court at Oklahoma City to have been honestly secured. In asking for the validation of Washington of the property, which is owned by the authorities, the company besides enormous quantities of oil, sufficient natural gas to solve forever the domestic fuel problem of Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri, the Uncle Sam Company will submit a proposition for refined oil and natural gas be declared public property and the proceeds for these commodities being determined by the State Utility Boards of the states in which the products are sold.
